The High Court in revision, ordinarily speaking will remand a case for a finding with reference to admissible evidence only, where the lower Court being competent to deal with facts has not adopted the course of ignoring the evidence wrongly admitted and considering whether there still remains enough evidence to support the judgment.

If the Court takes the view that irrespective of the improperly admitted evidence the decision is sustained by sufficient evidence, the decision cannot be reversed merely on the ground of the improper admission of evidence. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.). SANKAR CHENNA BASAPPA v. K. MANAPPA.

—S. 5—Rules under—R. 138—Liability.

—Servant of licensed master manufacturing gunpowder in master's house without latter's knowledge or consent—Master is liable for servant's act.

The accused held a license under the Indian Explosives Act to manufacture gunpowder. One of the conditions of the license was that the explosive shall be manufactured in a tent or lightly constructed building exclusively appropriated for the purpose and separated from any dwelling house. The accused constructed a building outside the village, which complied with this condition, and employed a woman who used to work exclusively in this building. One day the woman with her assistant went with ingredients for manufacturing gunpowder to the house of the accused in the village, and performed part of the process of manufacture there with pestles having iron rings without the knowledge of their master and while he was engaged elsewhere. During the process of manufacture there was explosion and the woman was killed and her assistant was injured.

Held, (Per Fawcett and Crump, JJ. contra Shah, J.)—that the act of the woman, though unauthorized, was one within the scope of her employment and the accused, her master, would be liable for her wrongful act. (Case-law discussed.) (Crump, J. on difference between Shah, and Fawcett, JJ.)

The East Indian possessions of France are not a "Foreign State" and Chap. II of the Indian Extradition Act of 1903 do not apply to those possessions. Extradition in such cases is governed by the treaty of 1815 between Great Britain and France. Article (ix) of the treaty of 1815 remains unaffected by Art. (xvi) of the treaty of 1876 and a British Indian subject may on requisition by the Governor of Pondicherry for instance be surrendered for the offence of theft committed therein without any preliminary procedure being adopted. The treaty of 1815 having provided that the surrender should be on demand, a more elaborate procedure cannot be superimposed by the unilateral act of one of the high contracting parties. Nor is it open to a Municipal Court to say that the accused should be surrendered with a certain amount of procedure: 47 C. 87, Foll.; 48 C. 328, Expi. (Wallace and Jackson, J.J.). The numerous provisions in the Procedure Code for service of notices or orders are intended to make it certain that a particular process or an order of the Court is brought to the specific notice of the individual affected. A mere knowledge that proceedings may be instituted or something of that sort is not sufficient to take the place of the imperative directions in the Code as to service on the actual individual. The words in S. 18 (2) "serve on the manager an order in writing" mean that such an order as is referred to in Form O should be served definitely on the manager of the factory: and that it should specify exactly what measures the manager is to take in order to remove the danger. —S. 34—Liability.

Liability of manager and occupier.

The duty to inform the authority under the Factories Act under S. 34 is laid on the manager. It is therefore primarily the manager who is to be supposed to have contravened this provision of the Act, but both the occupier and manager are made responsible jointly and severally for this contravention under S. 41-J. (Tek Chand, J.). WAZIR CHAND v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 658.

—S. 34—'Person.'

The word "person" includes the plural and consequently where as a result of a single accident more persons than one are injured the accident cannot be split up into as many persons injured and notice contemplated is single notice of the accident which the manager is required to submit to the authorities and therefore contravention of this rule is one offence which cannot in its turn be split up into as many offences as the number of casualties. (Tek Chand, J.). WAZIR CHAND v. EMPEROR. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 668.

—S. 42—Scope.

The structure of S. 42, Factories Act, indicates that one proceeding is split up into two proceedings and while the manager or occupier is accused of having committed an offence under the Act, he is also a complainant on his complaint against the other person or persons he has brought in. In the proceeding in which the manager or the occupier is the complainant he is liable to be cross-examined by the other person or persons who has or have been brought before the Court on his complaint. This must mean that the manager or occupier qua complainant must give evidence himself. There is no substance in the objection that the manager or occupier who initially is charged with an offence against the Act cannot go into the witness-box and give evidence himself, because he goes into the witness-box not as an accused in the case originally started against him, but in his own right as a complainant on his complaint against the other person or persons whom he has brought in. It is not a material irregularity to dispose of the two matters by one judgment or to record the evidence in the two matters together. (C. C. Ghose and Gregory, J.J.). FOREIGNERS ACT (3 of 1864).*—S. 2—Effect of transfer of territory.

Cession of territory by Britain to another state
—British subject ceases to be such on cession.

A relinquishment of the Government of a territory is not only a relinquishment of the right to soil or territory, but also of the rights over the inhabitants of the country. The distinction between a right of election of which sovereign he will become the subject and the method by which a man can leave a newly ceded territory and remain within the allegiance of his former sovereign, seems somewhat fine: but the distinction is one between a mere assertion of elected allegiance and actual conduct clearly showing such an election. It is not enough for an inhabitant to assert, when the question arises, that he has elected to remain within the allegiance of his former sovereign; there must be conduct on his part, such as leaving the ceded territory and going to reside permanently in his former sovereign's dominions to indicate his previous election. Any inhabitant of the ceded or separated territory has not the right to remain an inhabitant of it, and at the same time to retain the allegiance and nationality of the State which ceded or permitted the separation. The common law of England embodying the above rules is the law for the time being in force in British India within the meaning of the proviso to S. 1: 18 Cal. 620 (P. C.) and 42 Mad. 589 (P. C.), Foll.

The applicant was born in Ramdupati which was in British territory. In that village he had some lands and owned a house in which his family resided permanently. He, however, came to Bombay for purposes of trade. Ramdupati was subsequently ceded to the Maharaja of Benares by the British Government. The applicant continued to live in Bombay for trade before as well as after the cession.

Held, that the applicant was a "foreigner" by virtue of the proviso to S. 2 of Act III of 1915, amending the Foreigners Act, 1864. (Fawcett and Madgaonkar, J.J.). EMPEROR v. JAGARDEO RAMSUMER TIWARI. 90 I.C. 310 = 49 Bom. 304 = 87 Bom. L.R. 1043 = 26 Cr. L.J. 1526 = A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 489.

—S. 39 (b)—Liability to duty.

The ordinary interpretation of Cl. (b) would be that the duty is to be levied from the person who actually brought the timber from some place outside British India to the place, whereon its importation the duty becomes leviable, and thus it would be straining Cl. (b) to hold that timber, of which a person obtains possession and which has been originally brought from a place beyond the frontier of British India, is liable in the hands of that person to duty, though he has taken no part in the bringing of that timber from the place beyond the frontier. What the clause only contemplates is the levy of duty from a person, who has actually brought timber from a foreign place to the place where the duty is leviable; and if in fact, a person has not brought it from such foreign place and has not participated in a conspiracy to so bring it, the timber is not liable in his hands to a levy of duty: 17 Bom. —S. 41—Interpretation.

"Timber" and "forest produce." The words "timber" and "forest produce" in S. 41 are used in the widest sense as given in the definitions to be found in S. 2 and not in the narrow and restricted sense especially introduced to define and limit the powers described in Ch. 7. (Harrison, J.). LAL BADSHAH v. EMPEROR. 106 I. C. 790 = 29 Cr. L. J. 198 = A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 80.

"Timber and other forest produce." The phrase "timber and other forest produce" in S. 41 refers to timber and other forest produce as defined in S. 39, viz., timber or other forest produce which is produced in British India and in respect of which the Government has any right or which

—S. 59—Interpretation.

—Words "any person claiming to be interested in the property" in S. 59—"So seized".

The first canon of construction of a statute is that you must take the language as it stands and if it is clear, give effect to it. There is no possible ground for saying that the phrase "any person claiming to be interested in the property so seized" occurring in S. 59 could be construed as limited to the case contemplated by S. 57 when no mention is made of any such limitation, the language of the section is perfectly clear and unrestricted in its terms and must be given effect to accordingly. Apart from that, the words "so seized" logically and grammatically refer to the seizure under S. 52, which includes seizure of tools, boats, etc. (Pearson and Jack, JJ.). MEHAR SARDAR v. EMPEROR. —Court of law is not competent to consider the merits of a particular enactment.

The words "for the peace and good Government" are used because they are words of the widest significance and it is not open to a Court of law to consider with regard to any particular piece of legislation whether in fact it is meritorious in the sense that it will conduce to peace or to good Government. They are words which are intended to give subject to the restrictions of the Act, a legislating power to the body which it invests with that authority. There is nothing in that expression which can be the foundation of any reasonable argument to the effect that the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1925 was outside the jurisdiction of the local legislature. —S. 80-A, Cl. (3)—Interpretation.

—"Affect"—Meaning of.

Clause 4 is doubtless wider than the mere provision that the local legislature shall not have power to repeal an Act of Parliament and the word "affect" may cover any interference with the will of Parliament as expressed in a statute. But what Cl. 4 of S. 80-A refers to and preserves from interference is the effect of an Act of Parliament by its own force as a determination of the will of Parliament with reference to a particular subject-matter. It may well be that it guards against any possibility that a local legislature might attempt to interfere with the operation of Acts of Parliament that do not technically extend to India. But it cannot be construed as meaning that because in 1726 when there was no other law, the Courts in Calcutta adopted the law that prevailed at home subject to many modifications, therefore any part of that law so introduced which originated in statute as distinct from common law cannot be interfered with by the local legislature. The High Court cannot interfere with the order of a Panchayat Court under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. Code. But under S. 107 of the Government of India Act the High Court has powers of supervision over all the Criminal and Civil Courts in the Presidency, and when a grave error of a Panchayat Court which is not governed by the provisions of the Cr. P. Code appears on the face of the record the powers given by S. 107 of the Government of India Act could be invoked to correct such error.

Where the judgment of a Panchayat Court convicting a person under S. 426 of the Penal Code, does not mention the value of the amount of loss or damage alleged to have been caused, the High Court will set aside the judgment in the exercise of its powers of superintendence under S. 107 of the Government of India Act. —S. 25—Habeas corpus.

On an application by the de jure guardian for habeas corpus in respect of a child detained against its will the dominant question is what conduces to the interests and welfare of the infant and the Court must dispose of the application with reference to it. The moral, the religious and the physical welfare and the ties of affection as also the opinion of the child if it is capable of forming an intelligent opinion are to be taken into consideration. The opinion of the child is an important element and the degree of the child's mental development must to a certain extent weigh with the Court. The age of the infant is also an important factor. There is no inflexible rule in England that a boy over 14 and a girl over 16 will have the final voice and that the wishes of the infant have to be given effect to. Even if such a rule exists it is too artificial to be applicable in India. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.). SARASWATHI AMMAL v. DHANAKOTI AMMAL. 85 I.C. 840=

INCOME-TAX.*—Tax in respect of coal mines.

—Tax on gross revenue and income-tax—Distinctions.

A percentage tax upon the gross revenues of coal mines is indirect taxation. Though the tax is called a tax on "gross revenue," such gross revenue is in reality the aggregate of sums received from sales of coal, and is indistinguishable from a tax upon every sum received from the sale of coal. The general tendency of a tax upon the sums received from the sale of the commodity is that traders would seek to recover it in the price charged to a purchaser. Under particular circumstances the recovery of the tax may, it is true, be economically undesirable or practically impossible, but the general tendency of the tax remains. It is not analogous to an income-tax, which has always been regarded as the typical example of a direct tax. There are marked distinctions between a tax on gross revenue and a tax on income, which for taxation purposes means gains and profits. There may be considerable gross revenues, but no income taxable by an income-tax in the accepted sense. (Lord Warrington of Clyffe.) KING v. —Permanent Settlement Regulation.

—If repugnant to each other.

The subject-matter of the two legislations Bengal Regulation (I of 1793) and Income-tax Act are different; the later statute is on a subject which is financially and economically different from that dealt with in the statute of 1793; one deals with revenue assessed on lands, the other is a tax on profits.

(Mukerji, J. and Suhrawardy, J., concurring).

—It may not perhaps be right as a matter or method of construction in order to construe the Income-tax Act (XI of 1922) to put it side by side with Regulation I of 1793 without taking into account the events that have happened during and the changes that have been wrought by the long years that separate the two enactments. If the income-tax was sought to be levied upon Permanent Settlement Zemindars while Regulation I of 1793 was yet in sight it would perhaps have been understood as having taken away from the fixity of the State demand and altered the income and profits the unalterable character of which the Regulation had assured. The two enactments are not necessarily inconsistent or repugnant to each other and the Permanent Settlement Regulation I of 1793 may very well stand as an exceptional proviso under the Income-tax Act, XI of 1922. —Per Rankin, J. (Contra Page, J.)—Notwithstanding Permanent Settlement Regulation non-agricultural income from permanently settled estates is not exempt from Income-Tax Act.

Legislature has freely legislated so as to prevent zamindars from exacting excessive rents, imposing illegal cases, imposing undesirable conditions of tenancy, evicting tenants for inadequate reason, and so forth; this is no more than an exercise of the power expressly reserved by the Regulation. The Bengal Act X of 1859 and the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 represent this exercise of power. Incomes from fisheries and pasturage in permanently settled estates are not exempt from Income-Tax Act notwithstanding Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1893.

Per Page, J.—"The Legislature is entitled to abrogate, modify or destroy any right or privilege even if it be of its own creation. Although it is competent to the Legislature to withdraw or modify an exemption from taxation by a subsequent enactment, this can be done expressly or in general terms or by implication." The income derived from fisheries and the income derived from land used for stacking timber which accrues from the permanently settled estates cannot lawfully be charged with income-tax. —S. 2—Agricultural income.

—Fees received from land used for storing purchases of crops (paia) do not come within the definition of "agricultural income" as given in S. 2, nor does punyaha nazar or nazar paid by tenants of agricultural holdings at the beginning of the zamindari year, nor does nazar paid for petitions presented by the zamindar dealing with questions of succession. But nazar paid for recognition of succession or partition or for settlement is an income derived from land. (Rankin, C.J. and Masumdar, J.). EMPEROR v. PROBHA CHANDRA. 106 I. C. 353=

—Income from pasturage.

Income from pasturage is derived from land which is used for "agricultural purposes" and is, therefore, in the case of a permanently settled estate, within the exemption given by S. 4, sub-S. (3), cl. (viii) of the Act to "agricultural income" as defined by S. 2, sub-S. (1), cl. (a). Even to income derived from fees realised from graziers who graze their cattle in the forest areas and waste land there is nothing to render inapplicable the definition of "agricultural income" contained in cl. (a). The income-tax is one tax, and income assessed under one schedule cannot be assessed all over again under another. There is no legal presumption of a general character against "double taxation" in any wider sense. (Rankin and Page, J.J.). *PROBHAT CHANDRA BARUA v. —S. 12—Interpretation and scope.

Income from zamindari is assessable under S. 12 (1).

The words of S. 12 (1) are clear and emphatic and are expressly framed so as to make the sixth head in S. 6 describe a true residuary group embracing within it all sources of income, profits and gains, provided the Act applies to them, that is, provided that they accrue or arise or are received in British India or are deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India as provided by S. 4 (1) and are not exempted by virtue of S. 4 (3). Therefore, Ss. 6 and 12 of the Act bring into charge for the purposes of income-tax the income derived from a zamindari and the zamindar is assessable in respect of income, profits and gains derived from that source after making allowance for the jama assessed and paid. —Recovery of tax—Authority to Police Officer.

Where a Police Officer attached monies in a shop in pursuance of a distress warrant issued by the Collector for recovery of income-tax, and was assaulted by the accused,

Held, the Collector may, on receipt of a certificate from the Income-tax Officer recover the amount specified therein as if it were an arrear of land revenue, and in areas notified by the Commissioner arrears may also be recovered by any process enforceable for the recovery of an arrear of any Municipal tax or local rate. But in the absence of orders under S. 46 (3) (4), the Collector cannot issue distress warrant for realisation of arrears of income-tax. The Collector has no authority to issue distress warrant for the realisation of arrears of income-tax under S. 46 (3) to an officer of the Police and the police officer executing such a warrant cannot be said to be acting in execution of his duty as a police officer. On this ground therefore the charge under S. 353 must fail if there was resistance to the police officer. If it was a fact that the money belonged to the petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 and that they were separate from petitioner No. 1 against whom distress warrant was issued, then clearly the seizure of the money was illegal. —Super-tax levied on income of company—Liability of share-holders to be assessed on dividends paid to them.

In computing the amount on which super-tax is payable by an individual or Hindu undivided family under the Income-tax Act of 1922 the amount received as dividends from a Registered company should not be deducted. There is nothing in the Act from which it can be inferred that in computing the taxable income of individuals or Hindu undivided families for purposes of super-tax dividends upon which super-tax has been paid by the Company should be deducted. The intention of the Legislature was to charge super-tax upon the income of companies as well as upon the income of individual share-holders including in the income of the latter the dividends received from the company although they had already been charged to super-tax at the flat rate of 1 anna. Super-tax must be separately paid on the profits of a company by the company itself at the smaller rate and by the share-holder on the dividends received by him out of those profits as part of his income, the rate payable by him being on a sliding scale according to the amount of his total income. ## INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—History of legislation.

—Harmonious construction—Avoidance of inconsistency.

—C. P. Code, O. 48, R. 1 (w) and O. 47, R. 7.

The two provisions of the code are not mutually inconsistent but are really complementary of each other. The one gives the right to appeal and the other defines the extent to which that right can be exercised and according to the well-established rule of construction that where two co-ordinate provisions in an enactment are apparently inconsistent an effort be made to reconcile them. The two must be read together and taken together and thus they do not give an unlimited right of appeal. And even assuming that the rule that if two sections of a statute are repugnant the last must prevail and override the earlier applies O. 47, R. 7 should be held to control and restrict the earlier rule. *Edbs v. ## INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—History of legislation.

—Historical survey is permissible only if there is reasonable doubt.

Per Mookerjee, J.—A historical survey is not permissible in the interpretation. Such reference to the history of Legislation can only be legitimately made, when reasonable doubt is entertained as to the true construction of a statute. The operation may, however be easily carried too far, and may, in the case of codifying statutes, lead to results which have been emphatically condemned in decisions of the highest authority. (1891) A.C. 107; (1892) A.C. 481; 23 I.A. 18, Foll.

The proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute, to interpret it, to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by considerations derived from the previous state of the law. To begin with an examination of the previous state of the law on the point is to attack the problem at the wrong end; and it is grave error to force upon the plain language of the section of Indian Statute an interpretation which the words will not bear, on the assumption of a supposed policy on the part of the legislature to adopt or to vary, as the case may be, the rules of the English law on the subject. 85 Cal. 84 (F.B.); 45 Cal. 388; 85 Cal. 701, Foll. (*Mookerjee, Richardson, C. ### —Intention of legislature—Materials for finding.

—Per Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.—One of the cardinal rules of interpretation of statutes which is often times referred to as the golden rule is that the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words used by the legislature in expressing its intention is to be adhered to, unless that would lead to some absurdity or some repugnance or inconsistency with the rest of the statute, in which case the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words may be modified, so as to avoid absurdity, repugnance and —Expressed in words of enactment.

Intention of the Legislature is a common but very slippery phrase, which popularly understood, may signify anything from intention embodied in positive enactment to speculative opinion as to what the Legislature probably would have meant, although there has been an omission to enact it. In a Court of Law of Equity what the Legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legitimately ascertained from what it has chosen to enact, either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication. *Salomon v. ### —Intention of legislature—Penal Act.

—Paramount object is to ascertain legislative intent.

Lobo, A.J.C.—An omission which the context shows with reasonable certainty to have been unintended may be supplied at least in enactments which are construed beneficially, as distinguished from strictly, but the tendency of modern decisions upon the whole, is to narrow materially the difference between what is called a strict and a beneficial construction. All statutes are now construed with a more attentive regard to the language, and criminal statutes with a more rational regard to the aim and intention of the legislature than formerly. The paramount object, in construing penal as well as other statutes is to ascertain the legislative intent. (Percival, J. C., Aston, Rupchand Bilaram, De Souza and Lobo, A.J.Cs.). *EMPEROR v. ### —Intention of legislature—Principles.

—Per Niamatullah, J.—It is one of the elementary construction of statute that it should be read as to avoid introducing what the legislature has not thought fit to introduce, and that a construction which has got that effect should be finally rejected. ### —Intention of legislature—Relevancy of.

—Per Bhide, J.—It is an elementary rule of the construction of a statute that the provisions of an enactment must be construed according to its plain wording and nothing can be imported into it thereon on the basis of any speculation as to the intention of the legislature. (Broadway and Bhide, JJ.). DES RAI v. EMPEROR. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 781.

When once the intention of the legislature is plain, it is not the province of a Court to scan its wisdom or its policy. Its duty is not to make the law reasonable, but to expound it as it stands according to the real sense of the words. (Macleod, C.J. and Coyajee, J.). EMPEROR v. If the ordinary grammatical construction of a statute will result in a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the Act, the rules of grammar are subordinated to the rules of common sense and the statute is construed with reference to the intention of the Legislature. (Raymond and Aston, A.J. Cs.). HYDERABAD MUNICIPALITY v. KAZI FAHRUDIN. 81 I.C. 134=17 S.L.R. 273=25 Cr. L. J. 646=A.I.R. 1925 Sind 90.

Jurisdiction.

Inferior Court.

The rule defining the jurisdiction of an inferior Court, viz., a Court of limited jurisdiction either in point of place or of subject-matter, is not that where it appears upon the face of the proceedings that the inferior Court has jurisdiction, it will be intended that the proceedings are regular; but that, unless it so appears, that is, if it appear affirmatively that the inferior Court has no jurisdiction or, if it be left in doubt, whether it has jurisdiction or not, no such intendment will be made. (Percival, J. C., Aston, Rupchand Bilaram, De Souza and Lobo, A. J. Cs.). EMPEROR v. NOOR MAHOMED. 105 I. C. 433=22 S.L.R. 157=9 A.I. Cr. R. 66=28 Cr. L.J. 913=A.I.R. 1928 Sind 1 (F.B.).

The jurisdiction vested in a superior Court is not to be ousted except by express language or obvious inference from the provisions of a Statute. (Percival, J. C. and Rupchand Bilaram, A.J.C.). MAHOMED ABDUL MAJID v. EMPEROR. 101 I.C. 471=8 A.I.Cr.R. 43=28 Cr.L.J. 439=A.I.R. 1927 Sind 173.

Special presumptions of England not to be resorted to.

Per Richardson, C. J. and Newbould, J.—Indian statutes being of the modern character, it is wholly advantageous and desirable that they should be interpreted by the ordinary canons without resort to an adventitious presumption recognised, it may be, in England but not sanctioned by general principle and not authorized by anything in the Indian General Clauses Act which is itself so far as it goes, a statutory Code of construction. It is for the Legislature when it creates a new jurisdiction to define and limit the extent of that jurisdiction and when question arises as to what powers are or are not conferred, the answer ought to be found within the four corners of the statute. (Sanderson, C. J., Tennon, Richardson, Newbould and C.G. Ghose, J.J.). RAM SAGAR MONDAL v. ## Language.

The first canon of construction of a statute is that the language of the enactment should be taken as it stands and effect be given to it if it is clear. Rule applied to construction of S. 69 of the Forests Act. (Pearson and Jack, J.J.). MEHAR

If a statute creates a new duty or imposes a new liability, and prescribes a specific remedy in case of neglect to perform the duty of discharge... the liability, the general rule is that no remedy can be taken but the particular remedy prescribed by the statute. Liberal construction.

The law does not favour legal and strained intendments, when over-minute precision may confound legal certainty. (Kennedy, J. C., Aston and De Souza, A.J.Cs.). EMPEROR v. NABU. 90 I.C. 434=20 S.L.R. 34=26 Cr. L.J. 1554=A.I.R. 1926 Sind 1 (F. B.).

Location of provisions.

Per Niamatullah, J.—The order in which the provisions occur may in some cases assist the Court in construing one of those provisions. But where the arrangement is consistent with a reading which gives effect to the entire language of that provision, its plain meaning cannot be departed from only because a different location of such provisions would have made that meaning clearer. ## Marginal note.

Although a marginal note does not form part of a particular section it is of some assistance in properly construing a section. (Prideaux, Kinkhede and Kolhatkar, A.J.Cs.). GOLA v. EMPEROR. 114 I. C. 273=24 N. L. R. 158=30 Cr.L.J. 258=12 A.I.Cr.R. 177=A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 17 (F.B.).

Side notes are no real guide to the intention of the Legislature. The safest guide to it is the language of the section. —'Strict construction' means benefit of doubt, if any, should be given to party to be charged.

Per Rupchand Bilaram, A.J.C.—It is no doubt true that a penal statute or a notification conferring criminal jurisdiction in pursuance of powers vested by a penal statute should be construed strictly, and that omissions, if any, may not be supplied lightly, but there is no absolute bar to the omission being supplied in fit cases.

The rule of 'strict construction' of penal statutes as modified in modern times is not so rigid or unbending as it was in times gone by and the rule means very little more than that such statutes are to be fairly construed like all others according to the legislative intent as expressed by the statute itself or arising out of it by necessary implication, but if there be any fair and reasonable doubt, the statutes should be so construed as to give the party sought to be charged the benefit of the doubt.

—Plain and common sense meaning should be taken.

All penal statutes are to be construed strictly, that is to say, the Court must see that the thing charged as an offence is within the plain meaning of the words, used, and must not strain the words on any notion that there has been a slip that there has been a casus omissus, that the thing is so clearly within the mischief that it must have been intended to be included and would have been included if thought of. But where the thing is brought within the words and within the spirit, there a penal enactment is to be construed like any other instrument, according to the fair common sense meaning of the language used, and the Court is not to find or make any doubt or ambiguity in the language of a penal statute, where such doubt or ambiguity would clearly not be found or made in the same language in any other instrument. —Whether command to a rule-making body is directory or mandatory depends on the terms of particular enactment.

The provisions of a penal statute must be strictly construed; and it is equally true that in penal statutes the duties cast upon bodies with delegated powers are generally construed as imperative rather than directory. But each statute has to be construed according to its own terms and no inflexible rule can be laid down to determine whether the command to a body entrusted with the power of framing rules is to be considered merely as a direction involving no invalidating consequences if disregarded or as coercive with an implied nullification if disobeyed. In each case regard must be had to the scope and object of the enactment in question. (Eforde and Campbell, J.J.). EMPEROR v. BARKAT.

JUDICIAL OFFICER. —Consultations with other officers. —Impropriety of.

It is one of the elementary principles of administration of justice that a judicial officer, who is called upon to decide a matter in controversy, must exercise his own independent judgment, after hearing the parties concerned. It is the privilege as well as the duty of the presiding officer of a Court of Justice to form his own opinion on the point before him and to act accordingly. He ought not, as if it were, to mortgage his mind to another officer and to seek instructions from the latter, whenever he is called upon to decide a difficult or —Contempt.

—Need for special protection.

A Judge by reason of his office is precluded from entering into controversy in the columns of the public press. Whether the comments be of a permissible or of an improper character, he cannot enter the arena and do battle with his adversary upon equal terms. The Judge of a superior Court is moreover precluded by considerations of decency from having recourse to the remedy available to any other citizen, of whom defamatory words are spoken or written, of taking proceedings for libel or slander before the ordinary tribunals which are subject to his own jurisdiction and he requires therefore in the exercise of his office a special protection in order that his authority and dignity may be maintained. —Duty of Magistrate.

—Magistrate should not allow his executive zeal to outrun judicial discretion.

It is one of the most important duties of a Court of law to create and maintain confidence in the administration of justice and to conduct itself in such a manner as to produce in the minds of the parties an impression that nothing but absolute justice would be done to them.

Where a Magistrate declined to summon all the witnesses cited on behalf of the accused and took upon himself the duty of arbitrarily selecting only a few witnesses who were to be summoned to give evidence for the defence, adjourned the case for hearing at an out of the way place and continued the hearing in spite of High Court's order directing the Magistrate to give every reasonable facility to the accused to produce his defence evidence, and to hold the trial of the case either at the headquarters of the district or at a place which is either a railway station or easily accessible from a railway station and on closure of the case, called the accused and his counsel in the middle of the night and pronounced judgment at 1 A.M. inflicting upon the convict the maximum term of imprisonment permissible,

Held, that the proceedings taken by the Magistrate show that he did not hear the case with that judicial detachment which should characterize the trial of a criminal case, and that he allowed his executive zeal to outrun his judicial discretion. —Intervention by superiors.

—Invocation of, not allowed.

The elementary principle of justice is that a person cannot simultaneously perform the functions of a prosecutor and those of a Judge in a criminal case. A Magistrate ceases to be an executive officer when he is sitting in Court to try a criminal case, and thus he cannot be allowed to invoke the intervention of his superior executive officers in a matter

—Vol. II, Ch. VI, Para 67—Procedure in warrant cases.

—Long list of witnesses filed by accused—Court may refuse to summon but cannot order accused to pay for their costs.

The ordinary procedure in warrant cases is that the costs of causing the attendance of accused's necessary witnesses is usually borne by Government. The Magistrate has no doubt authority to depart from this usual practice, but there should be strong and cogent reasons for making the departure. Where the Magistrate finds that the accused has given a long list of witnesses to defeat or delay the ends of justice, he may decline to compel their attendance, under sub-S. (1), but at the same time he must be careful not to do any act which might hamper the accused in his defence. The Court should, in a case of this kind, adopt a reasonable course which would, while avoiding any hardship on either side, promote the ends of justice. (Shadi Lal, C.J.). SAYAD HABIB v. —Entire devotion to the interests of the client, warm zeal in the maintenance and defence of his rights and the exercise of his utmost learning and ability these are the points which can only satisfy the truly conscientious advocate. Every man accused of an offence has a constitutional right to a trial according to law and the duty of his counsel requires him to scan with legal knowledge the forms of the proceeding against the accused. Counsel assigned for the defence of an accused charged with the offence of murder cannot decline the office, nor can he abate a jot of his duty to the accused and the Court, because of the querulous attitude taken by another Counsel who is asked to associate himself with the Counsel assigned to the accused. In one case the Vakil was retained by two persons, one a gosha lady and the other an old man. They were the plaintiffs in a suit in which there stood to their credit in Court a sum of Rs. 1,218. The Vakil drew that money out of Court, but did not pay it over to the clients.

In another case, the Vakil appeared on behalf of the defendant in a mortgage suit, the defence was that, owing to the refusal of the plaintiffs to take his money at a time when, defendant was willing to pay it, plaintiffs had inflated the claim by claiming interest throughout a long period when they could have had the money but would not take it. In those circumstances, the client's instructions to the Vakil were to admit that Rs. 760 and odd was due, and he handed that sum to him with instructions to deposit it in Court. Although every application for adjournment for the purpose of a transfer indirectly implies that there is a belief in the mind of the accused person that he would not have a fair trial, an application for adjournment under S. 526 does not always amount to an allegation of partiality made by the accused's Vakil against the trying Magistrate. If an application is made in good faith, the mere fact that it turns out subsequently that there are not sufficient grounds for transfer would not lead to a necessary inference that there was misconduct on the part of the practitioners who were responsible Mere fact that opposite party happens to be member of the same profession is not a circumstance which entitles a member of the Bar to refuse to undertake the case against him.

It is very important that men at the Bar should understand that they are members of a public profession. That is by their very calling they engage and undertake to act for anybody who fulfils certain conditions. Therefore if a client comes to them with proper instructions and prepared to pay a fair and proper fee and invites them to undertake a case of a kind, which they are accustomed to do and they refuse, such refusal amounts to professional misconduct and should be punished as such. But in a murder case when a Counsel has reason to believe that he would not be available at the time when the case would be called on for hearing, because he has other engagements elsewhere, it is his duty to communicate with the person who had engaged him and to return the fee to him. The jurisdiction which the Court exercises under S. 13 is not a vindictive jurisdiction at all. Its main object in such a case is not to allow a man to practise in Courts, when he himself is counselling disobedience to the law and order enforced by Courts. When a man who has offended in that way comes before the Court and honestly expresses his regret and his intention to assist the administration of justice in future, there is no reason why he should not be given an opportunity of showing that his intentions are as he expresses them. A legal practitioner, as any other person has a right to entertain political opinions which may or may not be acceptable to the authorities. But having obtained license to practise in Courts, if he acts inconsistently with the position which he has obtained by virtue of the license granted to him, he abuses it and brings himself within the four corners of the Legal Practitioners' Act, A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 515 and A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 351, Follow.

—Advising non-payment of taxes or boycott of Courts justifies refusal to issue sanad.

Courts should not consider what the political opinions of anybody are, whether they are members of the legal or any other profession. But while the Courts will always uphold the liberty of the subject in thought or speech, an applicant who comes to ask for the issue or renewal of a sanad, is applying to be treated as a part of the machinery, for the maintenance of law and order in the body politic and to take an active part in administering, for the other subjects of the Crown, the benefits that may be supposed to result from the upkeep of law and order. It is intolerable and illogical that a man should seek to be put in that position, while at the same time he is saying that law and order should be disobeyed, and taxes are not to be paid and that all public offices are to be abandoned, in order to paralyse the very life of the body politic, apart altogether from any other views he may entertain, as to the desirability of the person or the particular members of the Government he attacks, or the particular character of the transactions carried on, in these Courts. A Court would not without stultifying itself, issue a certificate to a man, who, in the same breath that he is asking for it, cuts himself off and announces his intention to do his best to cut off others, from the life of the state. Whether a resolution passed by a meeting of a Bar Association declaring certain persons to be touts was or was not regularly passed must be determined by reference to the explanation to S. 36, sub-S. (1) and not by reference to any rules framed by an Association. The Act only requires that "members" shall vote and that the resolution shall be passed by a simple majority irrespective of the rules of the particular Bar Association. When forwarding the resolution the Secretary of the Bar Association ought to state the total number of members belonging to the Association, the number of those who attended the meeting and the figures of the votes for and against the resolution. The Collector of a certain place wrote to the Secretary of the Bar Association of that place inviting the Association to take steps "to consider the tout evil." After receiving this letter a meeting of the Association was held and the members then present appointed a sub-committee to investigate the prevalence of touting in the place, and to submit to the Association a list of persons whom the sub-committee considered to be acting as touts. That sub-committee presented to the executive committee of the Bar Association a list of persons whom it considered to be touts, and the executive committee thereupon issued a notice to all "resident members" of the Bar Association, i.e., members of the association resident, summoning an extraordinary meeting of the Association "to consider the tout evil." At that meeting the list of names prepared by the sub-committee of the Association was read out.

Held, that it was a meeting "specially convened for the purpose" of preparing a list of touts under S. 36 (1). (Banerji and Weir, J.J.). GHAFOR KHAN v. EMPEROR. 118 I.C. 524=26 A.L.J. 790=9 L.R.A. Cr. 113=10 A.I. Cr. R. 193=A.I.R. 1928 All. 334.

—Cl. 8—Misconduct of pleader.

Notice issued by High Court on 13th June, 1928—Bar Councils Act coming into force on 1st June—Notice is ultra vires.

A notice was issued on 13th June, 1928, by High Court against a pleader calling upon him to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the Legal Practitioners Act for professional misconduct. Objection was taken by the pleader in view of the Bar Councils Act which had come into force on 1st June, 1928,

Held, that the provisions of the Letters Patent, in so far as they may conflict with the provisions of the Act, were abrogated by S. 19 (2) and therefore it was necessary for the case to be either referred to the Bar Council or at any rate for the Bar Council to be consulted. The Court was not properly seized of the case and that the notice issued to show cause was, as framed, ultra vires and a nullity. (Boys, Weir and King, J.J.). Per Kanhaiya Lal, J.—A village panchayat is a Court for the purpose of S. 22 of the Letters Patent, and in the absence of any limitation imposed by any Act, the High Court has power under that section to transfer any criminal proceeding pending before a village panchayat to another village panchayat empowered to take cognizance thereof. —Calcutta (1865)—*—Cl. 25—Procedure.

—The initial step is for the trial Judge to reserve a point of law or for the Advocate-General to grant a certificate. The successive stages of the process which follows inevitably may be enumerated:—

(i) The Court reviews the entire case or such part of it as may be necessary.

(ii) The Court finally determines the point or points of law reserved or certified.

(iii) The Court thereupon alters the sentence passed by the Trial Court.

(iv) The Court passes such judgment and sentence as shall seem right to the Court.

The term "thereupon" must be construed with reference to the context; and it may, with good reason, be interpreted as equivalent to "upon final determination of the point of law reserved or certified in favour of the prisoner." It is not necessary that the contention of the prisoner should succeed in its entirety; if the opinion of the trial Judge on the point reserved or certified, which forms an ingredient of the reasons for conviction and sentence, is not supported, the conviction cannot be sustained, and it then becomes open to the Court to alter the sentences passed by the trial Judge. —Cl. 26—Procedure.

—Advocate-General must hear both sides—Allegation by parties must be verified.

Per Mookerjee and Richardson, J.J.—It is clear, on the language of Cl. 26, that the Letters Patent requires that the certificate should reflect the judgment of the Advocate-General and is presumably granted in the interest of justice after careful consideration of all available materials. If that judgment is founded on incomplete materials or inaccurate allegations, its weight is obviously diminished in a corresponding degree. In a case where the error ascribed to the Judge depends on the evidence adduced at the trial, it is plainly desirable that the notes of the evidence, as recorded by the Judge, should be laid before the Advocate-General when he was asked to grant the certificate. The requisite materials can always be obtained on application to the Judge. The Advocate-General must hear not merely Counsel for the prisoner, but also Counsel for the Crown before he grants the certificate. The allegations embodied in the petition to the Advocate-General should be verified by Counsel present at the trial or by other responsible person. (*Mookerji, Richardson, C. C. —Cl. 26—Verdict of jury.

—Per Rankin, C. J.—The verdict of the jury cannot be allowed to stand unless the High Court in review under Cl. 26 be of opinion that the same verdict would have been arrived at, had they been correctly and sufficiently directed. It is not open to direct retrial in such a case. 47 Cal. 671 (F. B.), Rel. on.

Per C. C. Ghose, J.—The word "thereupon" means that the determination of the point or points of law reserved or certified must be in favour of the prisoner before the Court can interfere with the conviction and sentence. If it be found that the opinion of the trial Judge on the point or points reserved or certified cannot be supported it is not open to the High Court to direct a retrial. No doubt the High Court has power under Cl. 26 to examine evidence and determine for itself whether after the exclusion of the evidence or matter which may be considered inadmissible, the residue and the record are sufficient to justify the conviction. The Court will not substitute its own finding for the verdict of the jury. It must consider whether the evidence on record improperly admitted was of such a nature that it possibly may have considerably influenced the minds of the jury and whether it was reasonably certain that the jury would, not might, have acted on the unobjectionable evidence if the wrongly admitted evidence or matter had not also been presented to them. Section 537, Cr. P. Code, has no application to a case under Cl. 26. 44 Cal. 477 (F. B.), Appr.; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 470 (F. B.), Not appr.

LETTERS PATENT—(Calcutta), (1865), Cl. 28—Scope.

Per Jack, J.—The Court can, on review, examine evidence for itself and determine without reference to the probable verdict of the jury, whether, excluding inadmissible evidence, the residue is sufficiently justifiable for the conclusion. If the Court is convinced on the evidence that the accused is guilty, he should not be acquitted merely on account of a defective charge. The unanimous verdict of the jurors should not be set aside on the mere speculation that certain allegations might have influenced them to some extent when it is clear that the verdict is entirely justifiable by the evidence. Section 167, Evidence Act, is imperative and applies even to the decision of the High Court when exercising its powers under Cl. 26. (*Rankin, C. J., C. O. ## —Removal or suspension from practice.

—A conviction under S. 17, sub-S. (1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XIV of 1908) constitutes a reasonable cause within the meaning of Cl. 8, Letters Patent, Lahore, for the removal or suspension from practice of an Advocate or Vakil. Strictly speaking, proceedings under Cl. 8 are neither civil suits nor criminal prosecutions. The High Court exercise a special jurisdiction over legal practitioners in pursuance of the authority conferred upon it by the Letters Patent or an Act of the Legislature and has inherent power to apply such rules of procedure as may ensure a fair trial of the matter requiring adjudication. What is essential is that the parties concerned should have a proper notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard. The propriety in law or in fact of the conviction cannot be questioned in the proceedings taken by the Court in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction. 22 A. 49 (P.C.), Ref. Advocate or Vakil may be struck off the rolls for an offence which has no relation whatsoever to his character as a legal practitioner but the mere circumstance that he has been convicted of an offence does not make it imperative on the Court to remove or suspend him from practice. It is not necessary that the act of a legal practitioner which is relied upon for striking his name off the roll should have subjected him to anything like a general infamy or imputation of bad character. 44 Bom. 418 (F.B.); 49 Cal. 732 and 49 Cal. 845 (P. —Advocate convicted for perjury in England—Disbarment by Benchers of his Inn—Subsequent good conduct—Admission as Advocate in India—High Court is not bound by the decision of the Benchers—Propriety of conviction cannot be gone into.

In an inquiry into the conduct of a practitioner under the Letters Patent, the propriety of a conviction and sentence could not be questioned, though the facts of the case might be considered, to see whether the culpability of the individual concerned was such as to disqualify him for his profession.

It is possible that, where the criminal law of the two countries differs in respect of the matters charged, or in a case where it is alleged that there had not been a fair trial in some foreign country, the above rule might be held not to be applicable.

The Madras High Court is not bound to follow the decision of the Benchers of the Inns of Courts. It has, by the Letters Patent, a discretion vested in it, and it must in every case exercise that discretion itself, giving, of course, due weight to the views of the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn in England.

An order for disbarment is not necessarily final or conclusive for all time and it is open to the Court to re-admit a practitioner, after the lapse of time, if it is satisfied that the practitioner has in the interval conducted himself honourably and the sentence of exclusion has had the salutary effect of awakening in the delinquent a higher sense of honour and duty, so that he may be safely entrusted with the affairs of his clients and admitted to an honourable profession, without its suffering degradation; and in such a case, it is open to the proper tribunal to restore a man to the rolls, whether he be a Barrister, Advocate or Attorney. 6 B. & S. 703 and 12 C.L.J. 525, Ref.

No different standard of conduct or character is required from a barrister of Indian race to a barrister of English race and also no different standard of honour should be held to exist for a practitioner at the English Bar of whatever race, and the Practitioners of this Court, whether Barristers or Vakils.

Although High Court has a very wide discretion in the exercise of its disciplinary powers, nevertheless, in a case where the acts charged were not committed in a professional capacity, and where they involve a criminal offence, it would not ordinarily be convenient for the High Court to exercise those powers until the charges have been investigated in a Criminal Court. A criminal appeal filed after the expiry of the prescribed period of limitation may be admitted if the Court is satisfied that the appellant had sufficient reason for not preferring the appeal within the period of limitation. If in such a case, the appellate Court desires to help the appellant the proper procedure would be to move the High Court to exercise its powers of revision.

In this case where the lower Appellate Court had extended the period of limitation without being satisfied as to the sufficiency of the grounds for doing so and had admitted the appeal, the High Court in revision refused to interfere as there was no gross miscarriage of Justice occasioned by the lower Court's action. 1 Lah. 508 and A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 662, Ref. (Wallace and Madhavan Nair, J.J.). LUNACY ACT (IV of 1912).*—Part. II—(Ss. 4 to 36)—Procedure.

—Orders by District Magistrate—Executive and judicial—Executive orders not subject to revision by High Court.

The Act deals specifically and under separate headings with two branches of proceedings executive and judicial. Any person considering himself aggrieved by an executive order passed by the Dt. Magistrate may apply under Part III for a regular inquisition conducted by a judicial Officer. The result of such inquisition is conclusive and overrides and overrules any order which may have been passed summarily by the executive authority. Under this Act the orders passed by the District Magistrate under Part II are purely executive and cannot form the subject-matter of a revision application to the High Court. MADRAS ABKARI ACT (I of 1886).*—Complaint—Procedure.

For complaints under the Abkari Act or under the Opium Act (I of 1878), the ordinary Criminal Procedure Code, is not applicable, but the procedure contained in those Acts is to be strictly followed; and as complaints by private persons are not provided for by the procedure in those Acts, they must be treated as not properly instituted: A. —Offences both under Abkari Act and Penal Code.

Where the accused has committed in addition to an offence under the Abkari Act a non-cognizable offence, under the Penal Code, the Police Officer would probably be correct in taking up the more serious offence as the principal offence, that is, the one in which he could arrest without a warrant, namely, S. 55 of the Abkari Act, and in following the provisions of that Act, so far as it can be done, rather than of the Criminal Procedure Code and, if he can follow the provisions of both by ensuring that the accused should appear before the Magistrate it is obviously his duty to do so. The same procedure would be the proper procedure for a Police Officer to adopt when he is confronted with an offender whose offences are both under S. 55 of the Abkari Act and a cognizable offence under the Indian Penal Code. An offender arrested under S. 31 may be bailed to appear before either a Magistrate or an Abkari Inspector, while one arrested under S. 34 can be sent only before an Abkari Officer. If the offender is sent under either section before an Abkari Officer, there is an enquiry under S. 40 (3) and the offender is sent under S. 50 with a report to the Magistrate for trial. But there is nothing in the Act to indicate what is the procedure to be followed when the offender is sent under S. 31 direct to a Magistrate. (Wallace and Madhavan Nair, JJ.) Y. —S. 55—Breach under.

A breach under S. 56 (b) is a breach distinct from those provided for in S. 55. Breaches under S. 56 are, from the fact that they do not entail liability to arrest, are of a less heinous kind than those under S. 55. Possession of an illicit quantity of arrack in breach of the license or permit or rule under the Act comes under S. 55 (a) and therefore does not come under S. 56 (b). —S. 249—Interpretation.

Municipalities are statutory bodies and they are created by a statute for the benefit of the public ; and it is not proper that any provision of law relating to them should be so construed as to work hardship or injustice. The provisions of Municipal law prescribing periods of limitation under it, should not be understood as if they were articles of the Limitation Act. (Devadoss, J.) MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, CHIDAMBARAM V. —Machinery.

The machinery contemplated in the Act is machinery worked by power such as steam, water, or electrical power, and should be confined to such forms of machinery as may reasonably be held to be in the same category as combustibles and unwholesome or dangerous trades, but machinery worked by hand such as handlooms or sewing machines is excluded. —Dangerous to human life, health or property.

MAD. DIST. MUN. ACT. (1920)—S. 249—Licensing power.

The words "likely to be dangerous to human life, health or property" are to be taken as qualifying each one of the previous clauses in (q) and not merely the last. The object seems to be to bring under municipal control by the method of issuing licenses the keeping or using of things which are dangerous to human life, health or property. Ordinarily any large machinery is dangerous to human life, but one cannot presume it with reference to any particular machinery. The conversion of paddy into rice is an industrial purpose. —S. 249—License if necessary.

—'Place' meaning of—Permission to construct obtained.

The word "place" in S. 249 must be taken to include not only a factory, workshop, or work-place as mentioned in S. 250, Cl. 1 (a), but any other place used for the purposes mentioned in Sch. 5.

The places referred to in S. 250 are those of a more important character, and before any person can construct or establish any such factory, he is bound to get the permission of the council to do so. That permission is given solely for the construction, establishment or installation. S. 250 does not deal with user of such places but only with their inception. When the owner wishes to use them, and they are such as come within Sch. 5, Cl. (q), S. 249 becomes applicable and the owner must take out an annual license from the chairman of the council : A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1131 Appr. 50 M. L. J. 384, A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 576=94 I. Sect. 249 of the District Municipalities Act cannot be held as repealed by reason of the fact that Local Boards have similar power of licensing under S. 193 of the later Madras Local Boards Act (14 of 1920). (Jackson, J.) PUBLIC PROSECUTOR V. RANGANAYAKULU CHETTIAR. 101 I. C. 667=50 Mad. 845=25 M. L. W. 768=28 Cr. L. J. 491=38 M. L. T. 373=8 A. I. Cr. R. 140=A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 602=52 M. L. J. 653.

—Permission to construct obtained—License if necessary.

The object and scope of Ss. 249 and 250 are entirely different. The former contemplates an annual payment for the use of the machinery, while the latter, a payment once for all for installing it, and therefore permission under S. 250 does not absolve the owner of a rice-mill and engine from taking out licenses under S. 249 ; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 576, Diss. from. MADRAS FOREST ACT (5 of 1882).

—S. 21—Cattle trespass.

A person cannot be said to permit cattle to trespass into a reserve forest, unless he knows that such trespass is likely to be committed and neglects, with such knowledge, to take measure to prevent it. The essence of the offence consists either in misfeasance, as in the case of one wilfully pasturing cattle, or in a malfeasance as in his neglecting to take proper measures to prevent the cattle trespassing in circumstances from which it may reasonably be inferred that such trespass might have been foreseen or known as the probable consequences of his negligence. The owner of the cattle cannot be found guilty merely because his cattle were found in the reserve forest. But it is not necessary that there should be an overt act on his part to make him guilty.

The onus of proving that he did not "permit" his cattle is not upon the owner. In every case it is for the Magistrate who tries the case to find on the evidence whether the accused by some act or omission or by negligence allowed or permitted the trespass, and if from the prosecution evidence he could presume that the owner failed to take such care as a prudent owner is expected to take, then the onus of proof that he took all reasonable care to prevent cattle trespassing, or that the trespass was in spite of his care, or against his orders, would be on the owner. Held: that the question satisfied the spirit of R. 196 (2). The specimens of questions suggested in the Criminal Rules of Practice seem to be leading questions suggesting torture or other ill-treatment by the police, and it seems to be undesirable to put such questions in the form mentioned in the rule. The whole object and policy of R. 196 is that a Magistrate should satisfy himself that there is no compulsion by the police or ill-treatment so as to raise the suspicion that the statement of the accused is not a voluntary statement, and so long as the spirit of the rule is satisfied it is undesirable that questions should be put in this form showing a total want of trust in the police. —S. 16—Notice.

A Local Board being a body corporate is other than and much more than the sum of its individual members. Its business therefore can be transacted only at its duly constituted meetings. Giving notice of resignation under S. 16 is one such business of the Board and can be transacted at a meeting of the Board. By circulating the notice of resignation to each member and upon its receipt by each member, the resignation does not take effect, although acceptance of resignation is not necessary under S. 16.

The President of a Local Board issued notice of his resignation to each member and its receipt was acknowledged by them. The Government also by its order expressed its view that the resignation took effect.

Held: that the order of Government was not conclusive but expressed only an opinion of the Government and it did not prevent a Court of law from coming to a contrary conclusion. There was no proper notice of resignation and therefore resignation did not take effect. (Curgenven, J.) SIVASANKARAN PILLAI v. EMPEROR. 113 I. C. 462 = 52 Mad. 476 =

Section 159 of the Act is not very happily worded. The real offence is the wrongful encroachment, that is committed by the person. The notice referred to in the section is in a sense merely in the nature of a condition precedent to the prosecution and all that the Act says is that, no one should be prosecuted straightway simply because he has committed or is deemed to have committed, an act of encroachment but the Act requires that some notice should be given to him and that he should be prosecuted only if even after such notice, he fails to remove the encroachment. It will be against all principle to hold that

The accused having made an encroachment on a public road, the President of the District Board gave notice under S. 159, Madras Local Boards Act, directing the removal of the encroachment and subsequently preferred a complaint. The complaint was, however, dismissed on the ground that the ownership of the road was with the Union Board. The President of the Union Board issued a fresh notice under S. 159 and filed a fresh complaint. The accused having been acquitted under S. 403, Cr. P.C., held, that the second complaint was maintainable and that the acquittal was bad in law. (Krishnan Pandalai, J.) UNION BOARD, AYYAMPET v. RAMACHANDRA AYYAR, 1930 M.W.N. 500.

—S. 159—Owner.

In order to make a person liable for disobedience under S. 159 he must be the owner or the occupier of any premises which caused the obstruction or encroachment.

Where the accused had before the date of the notice created a trust in favour of the whole community in respect of the nandavanam and divested himself of all interest in it, the fact that he constructed the compound wall or formed a nandavanam would not be sufficient to make him an owner.

The mere fact that he was a treasurer of some fund of the community would not make him a trustee of the nandavanam, or bring him within the meaning of the term "owner" as used in the Local Boards Act (Devadoss, J.) VADUGU KUMAR NADAR v. EMPEROR.

A market is a place set apart for the meeting of the general public of buyers and sellers freely open to any such, to assemble together, where any seller may expose his goods for sale and any buyer may purchase.

The word "new" in S. 170 is used in its ordinary signification as "for the first time opened or kept open," and therefore S. 170 does not apply to a market which was not opened after the coming into force of the Local Boards Act of 1920 but was in existence even prior to that Act.

Under S. 170 it is not the owner of the premises but the person who keeps open the market, that is, presumably the person who collects or has collected for him the fees levied in the market for the exposure and sale of the goods, who is punishable. ## —S. 7.—Evidence.

—General power of taking further evidence is not affected by S. 7.

Fawcett and Mirza, JJ.—S. 7 deals with the opportunities to be allowed to the person affected by the provisional order to oppose its confirmation, and naturally, therefore, provides for the call of further evidence being taken when necessary for the purpose of defence, but the general power to call for further evidence in other cases, which is implied by sub-S. (4) S. 3 of the English Act, 1920 is not thereby affected. In a case where the evidence before the Indian Court cannot be tested by cross-examination and introduces matter not mentioned in the evidence on which the provisional order is based, the order of the Magistrate for further evidence is desirable. —Evidence of desertion subsequent to provisional order can be considered.

Fawcett, J.—Sub-S. (4), S. 7 contemplates evidence of desertion subsequent to the provisional order for maintenance being taken into consideration, for it is relevant to the question whether there has been a real desertion, and the Court can either refuse to confirm the provisional order or confirm it without modification, or with such modifications as to the Court, after hearing the evidence, may seem just. —In order to show the absence of reasonable and probable cause, there are minor questions which it is necessary to determine, the burden of proving each of those minor questions lies upon the plaintiffs, just as much as the burden of proving the whole does. "The test" as to the burden or onus of proof whichever term is used, is simply this; to ask oneself which party will be successful if no evidence is given, or if no more evidence is given than has been given at a particular point of the case, for it is obvious that as the controversy involved in the litigation travels on, the parties from moment to moment may reach points at which the Tribunal will have to say that, if the case stops there it must be decided in a particular manner. 6 L. L. J. 1=A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 1.

—Civil action.*—Principles governing the right.

Where damages are sought for the mere bringing and prosecution of a civil suit two main questions emerge. The first question is a question of the remoteness of the damage. The mere institution of the proceedings may, having regard to their character, involve damage to credit or reputation, damage to property in the sense that the defendant is put to expense, or damage to the person in the sense that he is liable to arrest. In such cases that damage is not remote but in any ordinary case the bringing of an ordinary action however maliciously and however great the want of reasonable and proper cause, will not support a subsequent action for malicious prosecution. Injury to plaintiff's business is not a ground for maintaining such a suit. The second question is as to what is meant by malice. There is some authority for the view that it is actionable for one person wilfully to injure a man in his trade if damage results to him, provided that if the real purpose is not to injure another, but to forward or defend one's own trade, then no wrong is committed and no action will lie, although damage to another ensues. In some cases malice is postulated as an element, meaning thereby that the act complained of is wilfully and knowingly done, or that it is done for the purpose of injuring another, but not as connoting personal enmity or spite or some other evil motive. (Wren v. Weild (1869). 4 Q.B. 730 and Sorrell v. Smith (1925) A. C. 700, Foll. (Rankin, C. J. and C. C. Ghose, J.) IMPERIAL TOBACCO Co. v. ALBERT BONNAN. 106 I.C. 277=46 C.L.J. 455=A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 1.

—Acquittal on appeal no bar.

Conviction by the trial Court but acquittal by the Court of appeal do not conclusively show that the charge by the defendant against the plaintiff was a bona fide charge and is no bar to a suit for malicious prosecution. (Mukerji, J.) MADHO SINGH v. MANGAL SINGH. 79 I.C. 1023=5 L.R.A. (Civ.) 375=

—Civil action—When lies. A.I.R. 1924 All. 536.*—Sanction proceedings.

How far, proceedings for sanction to remove the bar to the institution of a prosecution instituted by the defendant, disclose a sufficient cause of action to found a claim of damages in malicious prosecution is a matter of considerable doubt. (Mukerji, J.) NAGENDRA NATH v. BASANT DAS. 57 Cal. 25=

A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 392.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—Civil action—When lies.*—Dismissal under S. 203, Cr. P. C.

Where a complaint is dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C., before proceedings are commenced against the accused, no action for malicious prosecution lies as the subject matter of the suit has not reached the stage of the prosecution. The mere fact that the accused was present and cross-examined the witnesses on behalf of the complainant does not alter the character or the proceeding: 38 Cal. 880, Rel. on.; 17 C.W.N. 554, Dist. (Das and Wort, JJ.) SUBHAG v. NAND LAL. 118 I.C. 133=8 Pat. 285=10 P.L.T. 415=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 271.

—Dismissal under S. 107, Cr. P. C.

Where the petition was one praying for action under S. 107 of the Criminal P. C., and was dismissed without issuing any notice to plaintiff, there was no prosecution of plaintiffs and consequently no action for damages for malicious prosecution would lie. (Coutts-Trotter, C. J. and Viswanatha Sastry, J.) SANJEEVI REDDI v. KONERI REDDI. 93 I.C. 8=

49 Mad. 315=23 M.L.W. 327=

A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 521=50 M.L.J. 460.

—Prosecution initially bona fide.

A prosecution may not be mala fide in the beginning; but the continuance of such prosecution after it was discovered that the facts upon which it was based were not true may give rise to a claim for damages for malicious prosecution: Fitzjohn v. Mackinder, (1861) 30 L.J.C.P. 257; 30 Bom. 37; 30 All. 525 and 12 C.L.J. 410. Rel. on. (Suhrawardy and Garlick, JJ.) RABINDRA NATH v. JOGENDRA CHANDRA. 114 I.C. 796=56 Cal. 432=

48 C.L.J. 339=33 C.W.N. 79=

—Confession.

A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 691.

A person is liable for prosecution starting on account of his implicating another man in a confession made by him though he himself did not lay any complaint. (Dalai, J. C. and Cuming, A. J. C.) BADRI SAH v. BALBHADDAR SINGH. 79 I.C. 697=

10 O.L.J. 468=A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 145.

—Wrongful Civil Suit.

Where the bringing of an action does, as a necessary consequence, involve an injury to property which cannot be compensated by the grant of costs in the action, a subsequent action for damages by defendant is not barred. Defendant, after agreeing to have the dispute as to the property with plaintiff decided by the award of a competent arbitrator, resiled after the award had been made, and instituted a suit against plaintiff in consequence of which she was deprived for a certain period of all rights to enforce the payment of certain debts due to her deceased husband with the result that their payment in certain instances became impossible owing to the action of the law of limitation:

Held she could not recover compensation by way of costs or under S. 144, C. P. C. The suit was therefore not barred. 42 C. 550 Diss. (Stuart and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ.) ARJUN SINGH v. PARBATI.

69 I.C. 173=20 A. L. J. 636=

44 All. 687=A.I.R. 1922 All. 465.

—Sanction proceedings.

The maintainability of a suit for malicious prosecution does not depend on there having been a prosecution in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure. The application for sanction is a preliminary or initial stage in a criminal prosecution and it is immaterial that this is done as the law required in a Civil and not a Criminal Court. 37 Cal. 358; 38 Cal. 880, Dist. The allegation that the defendant maliciously and without just, reasonable and probable cause instituted proceedings for sanction and that the plaintiff was obliged to defend the cases, are sufficient to disclose a cause of action. (Teunon and Newbold, JJ.) NARENDHRANATH DE v. JYOTISH CHANDRA PAL. 67 I. C. 705 = 49 Cal. 1035 = 27 C.W.N. 387 = A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 145.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—Damages—Assessment.

—Damages—Assessment.*—Principles governing.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution where it is found that the plaintiff has not spent anything towards the expense of defence, the amount being paid by another person and there being no legal liability to repay the amount so provided, no damages can be awarded, the plaintiff having failed to prove that he had sustained any damages as the result of prosecution. So also no claim for damage can be made on ground that plaintiff's shop was shut during trial when no damage is proved from that cause. A mere statement that plaintiff pays a certain income-tax does not show that any part of it was earned in trading on a particular shop and does not serve as basis for damages. (Young and Sen, JJ.) GYASIRAM v. KISHORE. 122 I.C. 185 = A.I.R. 1930 All. 165.

—Principles governing.

Damages for malicious prosecution are awarded to compensate the plaintiff for expenses incurred in the prosecution, pain to mind and body, and the loss of reputation, etc., which he has actually suffered, and not for injuries which he might have suffered, if he had been convicted. (Kendall, J.) SUKH NANDAN SAROOP v. FAZUL HUSAIN. 100 I.C. 449 = A.I.R. 1927 All. 412.

—In awarding damages to the successful plaintiff in a suit for malicious prosecution all legitimate expenses incurred by him or by her for establishing his or her innocence in the criminal case can be allowed. (Kinkhede, A. J. C.) VITHOBA V. BHIMAI.

82 I.C. 1014 = A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 216.

—Elements to be proved.*—Action for—Elements.

The first thing a plaintiff suing for damages for malicious prosecution must do is to show that he was acquitted of such charge. If he is found guilty by the Court before whom he was prosecuted, it cannot be said that he was maliciously prosecuted. 1 Luck, 215 (P.C.), Ref. to. (Misra and Pullan, JJ.) MATA PRASAD V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA. 5 Luck 157.

—Falsity of Charge.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has not to prove that the charge brought against him was false: A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 46, Foll. (Dalal, J.) RAMADHAR PANDE v. AMARAJI. 117 I. C. 368.

—In an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has to prove: (1) that he was prosecuted by the defendant; (2) that the prosecution terminated in his favour; (3) that it was instituted without any reasonable and probable cause; and (4) that it was due to a malicious intention of the defendant. It is not at all incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that he was innocent of the charge upon which he was tried. But, if the defendant pleads that his complaint was true and leads evidence to substantiate it, the question of the truth or falsity of the complaint may arise at the instance of the defendant. And, when such facts are professed to be within the knowledge of the defendant, the question of the truth or falsity of the complaint may also determine the question of want of reasonable and probable cause. The judgments of the criminal Courts are conclusive for the purpose of showing that the prosecution terminated in favour of the plaintiff, but the findings of the criminal Courts by themselves are not evidence of malice or want of reasonable and probable cause. It is for the civil Court to go into all the evidence and decide for itself whether such malice or cause existed or not: 10 A.L.J. 423; 11 A.L.J. 125; A. I. R. 1924, All. 536; A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 46, Rel. on.; 12 C. L. J. 410, and 21 All. 26, Dist. (Sulaiman and Kendall, JJ.) SHUBRATI v. SHAMSUDDIN. 110 I. C. 413 = 50 All. 713 = 26 A. L. J. 439 = A. I. R. 1928 All. 337.

—In a suit for malicious prosecution even though the plaintiff has not to prove innocence still he has to prove not only that the criminal proceedings terminated in his favour but also that the defendant (complainant) acted without reasonable and probable cause: A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 46, Foll. (Harrison, J.) PARTAP SINGH v. HARI SINGH. 108 I. C. 397 = 29 P. L. R. 366 (Lah.)

—Wicked Motive.

In the class of actions to which a claim of damages for malicious prosecution belongs the state of the defendant's mind at the time when he did the act is most important. The plaintiff cannot succeed unless he can show either guilty knowledge or some wicked or indirect motive in the defendant. The general principle of the Common Law is that an action for malicious prosecution lies whenever one man puts the process of the law in motion against another maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause. Even in cases in which personal element constitutes the essence of the offence there may be certain facts which may afford an answer to the prosecution and on determination of such facts, will depend the answer to the question as to whether there was or was not reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution: A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 46, Foll.; (1889) A. W. N. 189 and 11 A. L. J. 125, not Foll. (Wazir Hasan, J.) SHIVARATAN v. RAM SAMRAN. 101 I. C. 274 = 2 Luck. 487 = 4 O. W. N. 270 = A. I. R. 1923 Oudh 145.

—To succeed in a case for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must prove (1) that he was prosecuted by the defendant; (2) that the proceedings complained of terminated in favour of the plaintiff, if from their nature they were capable of so terminating; (3) that the prosecution was instituted against him without any reasonable and probable cause; and (4) that it was due to a malicious intention of the defendant and not with a mere intention of carrying the law into effect: A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 46, Foll.; 8 L.B.R. 78, held no good law. (Baguley, J.) U. SOE v. MAUNG NGWE THA. 106 I. C. 654 = 5 Rang. 705 = A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 51.

—In an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has to prove that he was prosecuted by the defendant; that the proceedings complained of terminated in favour of the plaintiff if from their nature they were capable of so terminating, that the prosecution was instituted against him without any reasonable and probable cause and that it was due to a malicious intention of the defendant, and not with a mere intention of carrying the law into effect.

A prosecution comes to an end even when a Magistrate declines to commit. (Viscount Dunedin) BALBHADDARSINGH v. BADRI SAH. 95 I.C. 329 = 1 Luck. 215 = 24 A.L.J. 453 = 3 O.W.N. 499 = 28 Bom. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—Elements to be proved.

—In a suit for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has to prove: first, that he was innocent and that his innocence was conclusively made out; secondly, that there was no reasonable or probable cause for the prosecution; and lastly, that the proceedings were instituted with a malicious spirit and not in furtherance of justice. (Fawcett and Madgavkar, JJ.) ALAMKHAN v. BANEMIYA. 95 I.C. 39=28 Bom. L.R. 459=

A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 306.

—In a case of damages for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must prove the absence of reasonable and probable cause: 8 O.L.J. 147. Foll. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.) NAND LAL v. DEBI DIN. 91 I.C. 223. (Oudh) —Proof of the former alone is not sufficient.

To succeed in an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must allege and establish both (a) absence of reasonable and probable cause and (b) malice, and must fail altogether if he fails to establish both. The malice necessary to be established is not, even malice in law, such as may be assumed from the intentional doing of a wrongful act, but malice in fact; malus animus indicating that the party was actuated either by spite or ill-will towards any individual or by indirect or improper motives though these may be wholly unconnected with any uncharitable feeling towards anybody. A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 1.

—Plaintiff has to prove in a malicious prosecution suit (1) prosecution by defendant, (2) plaintiff's innocence, (3) want of reasonable and probable cause, (4) malicious intention of the defendants.

Grounds raising suspicion about plaintiff's guilt that would be sufficient to save plaintiff from conviction are not sufficient in a civil suit. (Dalal, J. C. and Cuming, A.J.C.) BADRI SAH v. BALBHADDAR SINGH. 79 I.C. 5697=10 O.L.J. 468=A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 145.

If at the commencement of the prosecution, reasonable and probable cause was in existence or is not shown to have been absent, the action for malicious prosecution must fail. charge upon which he was tried. To throw the burden of proof on the plaintiff to prove that the charge brought by the defendant against him was false is tantamount to putting the plaintiff to the proof of his innocence without giving him the benefit of acquittal obtained by him in the criminal Court. The burden of proof shifts to the defendants that the charge disbelieved by the criminal Court was true: A.I.R. 1926 P. C. 46 and 25 Bom. 332, Rel. on. (Dalal, J.) KISHUN MAL v. SAKAL RAJ. A.I.R. 1929 All. 878.

The first thing that the plaintiff in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution has to prove is his innocence. Where the information to the Magistrate which led to proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P.C. being taken against the plaintiffs included more than one specific accusation.

Held: that the fact that one of these accusations had not been supported by evidence was no ground for giving the plaintiffs a decree for damages for malicious prosecution, when the case as a whole had not been found to have been laid without reasonable and probable cause. (Ross, J.) HARIHAR SINGH v. DAS-RATH AHIR. 85 I.C. 476=A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 469.

—Malice.

—Conspiracy to prosecute plaintiff—Suit against all defendants.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the finding was that all the three defendants conspired to prosecute the plaintiff maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause and that in furtherance of their design one of the defendants figured as the complainant in a cognizable offence of which information was lodged by him to the police and the latter prosecuted the plaintiff on the faith of such information. Evidence, in the case, was given by all the three.

Held: that under these circumstances, all the three defendants, including the police officer were rightly considered by the trial Court to have prosecuted the plaintiff so as to entitle the latter to sue them for compensation for malicious prosecution: 30 All. 525 (P.C.): A.I.R. 1926 P. C. 46, Rel. on. (Sen and Niamatullah, JJ.) MD. SHARIF v. NASIR ALL. A.I.R. 1930 All. 742.

—False accusation to knowledge of prosecutor—Inference of malice—Malice means indirect or improper motive.

Where the accusation is false and false to the knowledge of the prosecutor, absence of reasonable and probable cause is obvious. The inference of malice is likewise irresistible where the object of launching a false prosecution is to provide defence in a connected case in which the prosecutor is the accused. In this connection malice does not necessarily mean enmity or hatred but any indirect or improper motive. Prosecuting another person on a groundless charge for the purpose of establishing false defence in another case is actionable. (Niamatullah, J.) BANSI v. HUKAM SINGH. A. I. R. 1930 All. 216,

—Proof of—Engaging Counsel in Criminal Case.

Where the police investigate a case and sends it up for trial, in the absence of proof that the informant intentionally gave false information, it cannot be said that he acted maliciously merely because he was told by some persons that the person complained of was innocent nor because the informant engaged a counsel in the criminal case. (Brown, J.) YE NAM LOW v. MAUNG PE-WUN. 117 I.C. 62=

A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 63.

—Maliciously bringing a civil suit—Action may lie but not if the object is to defend one's own trade.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—Malice.

Where damages are sought for the mere bringing and prosecution of a civil suit two main questions emerge. The first question is a question of the remoteness of the damage. The mere institution of the proceedings may, having regard to their character, involve damage to credit or reputation, damage to property in the sense that the defendant is put to expense, or damage to the person in the sense that he is liable to arrest. In such cases that damage is not remote but in any ordinary case the bringing of an ordinary action however maliciously and however great the want of reasonable and proper cause, will not support a subsequent action for malicious prosecution. Injury to plaintiff's business is not a ground for maintaining such a suit. The second question is as to what is meant by malice. There is some authority for the view that it is actionable for one person wilfully to injure a man in his trade if damage results to him, provided that if the real purpose is not to injure another, but to forward or defend one's own trade, then no wrong is committed and no action will lie, although damage to another ensues. In some cases malice is postulated as an element, meaning thereby that the act complained of is wilfully and knowingly done, or that it is done for the purpose of injuring another but not as connoting personal enmity or spite or some other evil motive. Wren v. Weild (1869) 4 Q. B. 730 and Sorell v. Smith (1925) A. C. 700, Foll. (Rankin, C. J. and C. C. Ghose, J.) IMPERIAL TOBACCO Co. v. ALBERT KONNAN. 106 I.C. 277 = 46 C.L.J. 455 = A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 1.

—Proof of malice—Getting up false evidence.

In a suit for malicious prosecution the fact that defendant lodged his complaint and got up false evidence in support of it, shows not merely that he had not sufficient and reasonable cause but that he was actuated by malice. (Fawcett and Madgavkar, J.J.) ALAMKHAN v. BANEMIYA. 95 I.C. 39 = 28 Bom. L.R. 459 = A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 306.

—Prosecution bona fide in origin malicious subsequently.

A prosecution need not be malicious from the very commencement of it. It may have been undertaken at the instance of a Judge or Magistrate or it may have been commenced under bona fide belief in the guilt of the accused. But it may subsequently become malicious in any of the stages through which it has to pass, if the prosecutor having known subsequently of the innocence of the accused perseveres malo animo in the prosecution with the intention of procuring a conviction of the accused. But in any case the foundation of an action for malicious prosecution is malice and this malice may exist at any time in the course of the enquiry. (Kinkhede, A. J. C.) VITHOBA v. MT. BHIMAI. 82 I.C. 1014 = A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 216.

—Protecting one's own interest does not imply malice.

The mere institution of a prosecution without reasonable and probable cause is not sufficient to justify a decree in a suit for malicious prosecution, if the defendant honestly believed that the accused (plaintiffs) had committed a criminal offence; it is further necessary to find that the prosecution was malicious.

To protect one's own interest is not necessarily malicious and is not incompatible with a real desire to serve the ends of justice. Where a prosecution is obviously false and not instituted in good faith, the Courts will infer malice but where a prosecution has been instituted under a bona fide belief that the accused has committed an offence, even though that belief is mistaken, the plaintiff's cannot obtain a decree unless the prosecution is malicious as well, even if inquiry would have shown that no offence had been committed. 1901 A. C. 495 Foll. (Pratt, J.) MAUNG SET KHAING v. MAUNG TUN NYEIN. 92 I.C. 512 = 4 Bur. L.J. 69 = 3 Rang. 82 = A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 221.

—Anger and haste contra indicate malice.

If there was an honest belief in the plaintiff's guilt neither anger nor hastiness on the part of the defendant would evidence malice, and anger so far from being a wrong or indirect motive is one of the motives on which the law relies to secure the prosecution of offenders, while hastiness in the defendant's conclusion as to the plaintiff's guilt although it might account for his coming to a wrong conclusion, does not show the presence of any indirect motive. (Abdul Raoof and Campbell, J.J.) ABDUL SHAKUR v. LIPTON AND CO.

72. I.C. 411 = 6 L.L.J. 1 = A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 1.
—False allegations to the knowledge of the prosecutor indicate malice and advice of Counsel is no justification for the prosecution where true facts are not laid before Counsel.

By an agreement between the parties plaintiff contracted with the defendant to take on lease a cinema which was to be constructed by the defendant. There was time limit for the building in the contract which was on four sheets of paper bearing a certain original date. The solicitor of both the parties added a fresh front sheet on a stamp paper each time the contract period was altered and it was signed and initialled by the parties. Owing to quarrels due to a desire to alter the contract in a particular way on the side of both parties, the defendant applied for prosecution of the plaintiff for cheating and forgery on the ground that the plaintiff took the new front sheet, attached to it the remaining back sheets of the original agreement and tried to have the documents so prepared registered. The result of this prosecution was acquittal in the Sessions. Plaintiff sued for damages for malicious prosecution, held, that as it was the intention of the parties that the new front sheet was to be a part of the document, the prosecution of the plaintiff was without reasonable and probable cause and was also malicious since the object of the defendant was to take undue advantage on account of a pending prosecution of the plaintiff. No doubt where true facts are laid fairly before the legal adviser and on his advice prosecution is started a party is ordinarily protected but not where facts are not fairly laid before the adviser. —Measure of Damages.

The fact that criminal proceedings end without even the issue of a process against the accused person will be an element for consideration on the question of the measure of damages for malicious prosecution. (Wazir Hasan and Gokarnath Misra, J.J.) GUR SARAN DAS v. ISRAR HAJDAR. 105 I.C. 553 = 1 L.C. 492 = A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 471.

—Prosecution.

—Application under Criminal P.C. S. 436 is prosecution.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—Prosecution.

The word 'prosecution' has a very wide significance and does not merely mean an actual trial or an enquiry which may result in a conviction and the imposition of imprisonment or fine. Therefore, an application in revision under S. 436, Criminal P.C., for ordering an enquiry or a retrial is a prosecution: 17 C.W.N. 554; 19 C.W.N. 935; 41 All. 503 and A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 145, Rel. on. (Sulaiman and Niama-tullah, JJ.) B. MADAN MOHAN SINGH v. B. RAM SUNDAR SINGH. 1930 A.L.J. 885 =

A.I.R. 1930 All. 326.

—Correct information to police—Prosecution thereon—Defendant not liable.

In India the police have special powers in regard to the investigation of criminal charges, and it depends very much on the result of their investigation whether or not further proceedings are taken against the person accused. If, therefore, a complainant does not go beyond giving what he believes to be correct information to the police, and the police without further interference on his part (except giving such honest assistance as they may require), think fit to prosecute, it would be improper to make him responsible in damages for the failure of the prosecution. But if the charge is false to the knowledge of the complainant; if he misleads the police by bringing suborned witnesses to support it; if he influences the police to assist him in sending an innocent man for trial before the Magistrate, it would be equally improper to allow him to escape liability because the prosecution has not technically been conducted by him.

Therefore, it is impossible to hold that the defendant is liable for damages where there is not an iota of evidence to suggest that he ever went beyond giving a true information of the occurrence regarding a theft in his house and also a true statement of the fact that he suspected the plaintiff: 30 All. 525 (P.C.), Foll. (Mukerji, J.) NAGENDRA NATH v. BASANTA DAS.

—Proceedings before police are proceedings anterior to "Prosecution"—Semble.

Semble—In the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Balbhaddar Singh v. Badri Sah (A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 46) there is sufficient to indicate that proceedings before the police are proceedings anterior to "prosecution." There is also enough in the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (30 All. 525) to indicate that police proceedings are distinct from a "prosecution" for the purpose of a suit for malicious prosecution. (Mukerji, J.) NAGENDRA NATH v. BASANTA DAS.

57 Cal. 25 = A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 392.

—Prosecution in the sense of the Criminal Procedure Code—No condition precedent.

A suit for malicious prosecution is not a statutory suit and if the facts alleged disclose a cause of action, notwithstanding that the suit has been named or described as such, that cause must be tried. For there are certain wrongs akin to malicious prosecution which entitle the person aggrieved to sue, as for instance, malicious abuse of the process of the Court, malicious arrest, malicious search and malicious execution. These kindred suits are sometimes treated as being suits for malicious prosecution and this is the origin of the dictum "that the maintainability of a suit for malicious prosecution does not depend on there having been a prosecution in the sense in which that term is used in the Criminal Procedure Code."

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—Prosecution.

The dictum is perfectly correct so long as it is meant to apply to these kindred suits: 38 Cal. 880, Rel. on. (Mukerji, J.) NAGENDRA NATH v. BASANTA DAS.

57 Cal. 25 = A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 392.

—Application under Sec. 195, Cr. P. C. is prosecution.

The definition of 'prosecution' is not confined to prosecution before a Magistrate or a Criminal Court. If a Judicial Tribunal is moved which has the power to take criminal action against the person charged the requirement of the law is satisfied and a claim for damages for malicious prosecution will arise. The word "prosecution" includes such civil actions as may be the subject of a suit for malicious prosecution: (Case-law discussed.) A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 145, Rel. on. (Sukrawardy and Garlick, JJ.) RABINDRA NATH v. JOGENDRA CHANDRA. 114 I.C. 796 = 56 Cal. 432 =

100 I.C. 449 = A.I.R. 1927 All. 412.

—Giving information leading to prosecution is "prosecution."

In any country, where, as in India, prosecution is not private, an action for malicious prosecution in the most literal sense of the word, could not be raised against any private individual. But giving information to the authorities which naturally leads to prosecution is just the same thing. And if that is done and trouble is caused, an action will lie. (Viscount Dunedin). —Prosecution does not start until process is issued.

Defendant filed a complaint before the Presidency Magistrate, George town, Madras, charging the plaintiff with a criminal offence, viz., criminal breach of trust. The Magistrate held an enquiry himself presumably under S. 202 of the Criminal P. C., after issuing notice to the plaintiff and giving him an opportunity to attend the enquiry. He did attend the enquiry and the result of it was that the Magistrate dismissed the charge.

Held: that in law there was no "prosecution" of the plaintiff by the defendant and as there was no prosecution in law the plaintiff's claim for damages for malicious prosecution must fail: A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 521; and 37 Mad. 181, Foll. (Beasley, J.) A. —Mere setting of law in motion, no test—Conduct considered.

In a case for malicious prosecution the mere setting of law in motion is not the test to find out who the prosecutor really was. The conduct of the complainant before and after making the charge must be taken into account. Therefore if the complainant has not done anything beyond merely giving what he believed to be correct information to the police and if without further interference on his part the police have thought fit to prosecute, it is not proper to hold him liable in damages if the prosecution results in failure; but if to the knowledge of the complainant the charge was false and if he misled the police by bringing suborned witnesses to support it and if the police were influenced by him to send an innocent man for trial before a Magistrate it will not be proper to allow him to escape the liability to pay damages simply on the ground that the prosecution was technically not conducted by him. —Reasonable and probable cause.

—Mixed question of law and fact.

In malicious prosecution the existence of reasonable and probable cause is a question for the Judge and not for the jury. In India the balance of authorities is in favour of the view that the question is a mixed one of law and fact and the inference deducible from proved facts may be examined by the High Court on second appeal: 16 C. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—Reasonable and probable cause.

The plaintiff, a servant of the defendant's neighbour, was earning Rs. 7 a month. About 14 years ago, he was imprisoned for six months on a conviction of theft. Thereafter, about 10 years ago, he stole some money by opening a trunk. He had the reputation of a “dagi” in the village. Quite recently there was an inquiry preliminary to the starting of a case under Criminal P.C., S. 110, in which proceedings the defendant had taken a prominent part. There was a theft in the defendant's house and the next day, in his information to the police, the defendant stated that he suspected the plaintiff in connexion with the theft. Upon this information the police arrested the plaintiff, kept him in hajat, and eventually, finding no evidence connecting him with theft, submitted a final report on which the plaintiff was discharged. The plaintiff brought a suit for malicious prosecution.

Held: that in view of all these facts it was exceedingly difficult to hold that there was want of reasonable and probable cause on the part of the defendant in suspecting the plaintiff and mentioning about this suspicion in the information of the occurrence that he lodged with the police. The determination of the issue as to the absence of existence of a 'reasonable and probable cause' depends entirely on the circumstances of each case. The only possible rule to guide is 'that there must have existed a state of circumstances upon which a reasonable and discreet person would have acted. The rule prescribes not a standard of absolute rectitude and certainty but of reasonableness and probability in relation to a defendant's mind. The question whether or not a reasonable man would or would not act upon the information given by another must depend in a great degree upon the opinion to be formed of the position and circumstances of the informant, and the amount of credit which may be due under those circumstances to the person who thus conveyed the information. In an action for a malicious prosecution where a person is proved to have acted upon the information of a trustworthy informant he cannot be said to have proceeded without reasonable and probable cause because he had not made inquiry of some one else who could have repeated and confirmed what was told him. The defendant's persistence in pursuing the accusation by filing the petition for revision would certainly be evidence of malice, but it is no evidence of the absence of reasonable and probable cause. —Suit for

A suit for malicious prosecution is not a statutory suit and if the facts alleged disclose a cause of action notwithstanding that the suit has been named or described as such, that must be tried. For there are certain wrongs akin to malicious prosecution which entitle the person aggrieved to sue, as for instance, malicious abuse of the process of the Court, malicious arrest, malicious search and malicious execution. These kindred suits are sometimes treated as being suits for malicious prosecution and this is the origin of the dictum "that the maintainability of a suit for malicious prosecution in the sense in which that term is used in the Criminal Procedure Code." The dictum is perfectly correct so long as it is meant to apply to these kindred suits: 38 Cal. 880, Rel. on. (Mukerji, J.) NAGENDRA NATH v. BASANT DAS. 57 Cal. 25=

It is not necessary, in order to succeed in an action for malicious prosecution, for the plaintiff to prove that he has suffered any special pecuniary loss through the conduct of the defendant. The unwarranted charge brought against him of criminal misconduct must of itself injure his reputation; it might lead to an arrest for which he would be entitled to further compensation. Part (a) of the section requires that a driver should stop in three sets of circumstances, firstly that traffic may be regulated, secondly that a name and address may be obtained with a view to prosecution, and thirdly for the purpose of enforcing any of the provisions of the Act, such as checking the license and inspecting a bus where it is suspected to be overloaded and it is not necessary that the police officer stopping the vehicle should be engaged in regulating traffic. #### —S. 5—Convictions.

—Rules under R. 27-A—Conviction for breach of R. 27-A—Subsequent conviction under S. 5 on same facts is not illegal.

The accused driving a motor car while under the influence of liquor, ran into another motor car and damaged it. He was tried under R. 27-A framed under S. 16 and convicted on his plea of guilty, and he was again tried for rash and negligent driving on the same facts under S. 5 and was convicted.

Held, that a breach of the R. 27-A would be committed the moment the accused was driving the car in an intoxicating state and the act of rashness in regard to which he was convicted was a subsequent event, and that, therefore, there was nothing illegal in his being separately charged and tried for each of the two offences. #### —S. 5—Dangerous driving.

Two cars were going under 15 miles per hour along the road from South to North, and while another car came in the opposite direction from North to South, G's baby car, passed the two cars going towards the North. G was going about 25 miles per hour. The road was at the place 40 to 50 feet wide as would give ample room for 4 cars to pass abreast with any amount of room to spare. There was no traffic of any kind on the road at the time except the 4 cars. G was not shown to be over the wrong side of the road.

Held, that there would be ample room for a very small car like that of G to pass without trenching on the right hand side of the road. Even if he did go slightly over the middle line the car coming in the opposite direction had 20 feet in which to swing to its left. G's driving could not therefore be assumed to be reckless or negligent; an estimate speed of 25 miles per hour could not be regarded as anything out of the ordinary, on that road. Fine should be proportionate to means of accused—In case of professional drivers the best course is to exercise powers under S. 18 (2).

The general rule is that the fine imposed on an accused person should not be excessive, having regard to his pecuniary means. The best way to stop dangerous driving by persons, who earn their livelihood by driving motor vehicles, is for the Court, on conviction of the offender, to exercise its powers under Sub-S. (2) of S. 18, under which such Court "shall cause particulars of the conviction to be endorsed" on any license held by the accused, and may (1) cancel or suspend that license, or even (2) declare the accused disqualified for obtaining a license either permanently or for such period as it thinks fit. The exercise of that power will have a very deterrent effect, especially in the case of persons who earn their livelihood by driving motor vehicles. (Fawcett and Madgavkar, JJ.) EMPEROR v. The accused was driving on a wrong side of the road at a sharp corner entering into a thoroughfare of considerable traffic with the result that he came into collision with a motor bicycle, the side-car of which was damaged. It was due to the presence of mind of the person who was riding the motor bicycle that no further damage occurred.

Held, that an offence under Section 279, Penal Code, was committed. The offence of the accused was more serious than that contemplated by Section 5 of Act VIII of 1914. That section refers to a person who is driving a car in a manner which would in ordinary circumstances be proper, but owing to the special condition of the road at the time he is riding on it, is improper. Motor driven without owner's knowledge by an unlicensed driver—Owner is not liable—Nor is he liable even if his licensed driver had permitted the unlicensed driver to drive.

Where a particular intent or state of mind is not of the essence of an offence, a master can be made criminally liable for his servant's acts if an act is expressly prohibited, but not otherwise; and he cannot be so made liable if the act provides for liability for permitting and causing a certain thing unless it can be shown that the act was done with the master's knowledge and assent, express or implied.

It is ultra vires of the local Government to fix a time limit in the registration certificate and to make a corresponding change in the Schedule D as no power was given by S. 11 of the India Motor Vehicles Act to make rules for that purpose. —S. 11—Accident.

—Madras Rules under—R. 27(c) providing for report of accidents to police is not ultra vires—"Accident" meaning.

Rule 27 (c) which provides that the driver of the motor vehicle shall promptly report all occurrences of accidents to the nearest police station is intended to apply only to accidents happening to the car which one is driving and which results in some injury, annoyance or danger to the public or of danger or injury to public property or obstruction to traffic and so understood it is not ultra vires.

The petitioner was driving his car when on the way the car went out of control and jumped over a culvert, the parapet of which was only nine inches high, and fell into a channel. As a result of the accident, the front axle of the car was bent and some chunam was knocked off on the eastern side of the culvert. Those who were in the car received slight injuries; but they were able to return to their homes in the same car:

Held: that the incident is not an accident within the meaning of the rule.

—S. 16—Applicability.

—U.P. Motor Vehicles Rules, R. 11—R. 11 is not applicable to cars registered outside United Provinces.

There is nothing in the wordings of these rules to show that R. 11 applies to cars registered outside the United Provinces. It is clear from the definition of "Registering Authority" in R. 3 that this expression, as used in R. 11, means the authority who had registered the car under the rules in force in the United Provinces. Where therefore the applicant's car is not registered in the United Provinces, but brought there for a short period, R. 11 has no application to his case. (Sen, J.) P.C. CHAUDHRI v. —S. 14—Procedure.*—Seizure.

Under Ss. 14, 15 and 16 it is only search that has to be carried out in accordance with the rules for searches under Cr.P. Code, and the rules have no bearing on seizures. (Baguley, J.) MAUNG SAN MYIN v. EMPEROR. 121 I.C. 716=7 Rang. 771=31 Cr. L.J. 303=A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 49.

—The provisions of S. 103 of the Cr.P. Code, are applicable to searches made under S. 14 of the Opium Act, but not to searches in an open place under the provisions of S. 15. (Mya Bu, J.) KALI KUMAR DE v. KING, EMPEROR. 100 I.C. 980=6 Bur. L.J. 11=28 Cr. L.J. 372=7 A.I. Cr. R. 549=A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 170.

—S. 90—Meaning of possession.

Possession implies knowledge, and there would be no possession when there is no knowledge on the part of the ostensible occupant of the cabin or room as the case may be. Possession without knowledge can hardly have been meant since in that case the element of criminal intention or knowledge would be entirely wanting.

Where there is undoubtedly ground for grave suspicion regarding possession against the accused, but the element of reasonable doubt is not excluded, it would not be safe to conclude that the accused had the knowledge which is necessary to convict him of the offence. The onus of proving that knowledge is upon the prosecution, and relying solely upon the bare fact that the opium was found in the accused's cabin without proof of any additional or extraneous facts to establish any connexion between him and the opium is not sufficient to discharge that onus. (Graham and Pancridge, J.J.) CYRIL C. BAKER v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 668.

ORAL EVIDENCE, ADMISSIBILITY.

See EVIDENCE ACT, S. 92.

ORIGINATING SUMMONS.

See CALCUTTA HIGH COURT RULES.

ORDINANCE.

See MARTIAL LAW—ORDINANCE.

—S. 14—Irregularity.

No objection was taken to the original selection of the jurors, eight of whom were present in the Court, and instead of conducting a second ballot, as required by R. 14, Ch. 5, Oudh Criminal Rules, the Judge chose five out of the eight present. The Judge asked the accused whether they had any objection to this selection but they had none,

Held: that the irregularity was covered by S. 537, Cr. P. Code, and did not vitiate trial: 8 Cal. 739, Foll.; 33 All. 385, Not. Foll. [But see A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 242.] (Rasa and Pullan, J.J.) RAM ADHIN v. EMPEROR. 114 I.C. 814=6 O.W.N. 97=30 Cr. L.J. 384=A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 154.

—S. 7—Scope.*—Ordinary original jurisdiction.

Though it may be conceded that according to S. 7 the Chief Court of Oudh has original jurisdiction in civil matters over certain classes, yet it cannot be considered to be Court of "ordinary" original civil jurisdiction as required by S. 195 (3), Cr. P. Code, because jurisdiction conferred by S. 7 is not an "ordinary" original civil jurisdiction. (Wazir Hasan, J.) PANCHU v. JUMMAN. 121 I.C. 90 = 6 O.W.N. 848 = 1929 Cr.C. 589 = 31 Cr.L.J. 205 =

—S. 40—Applicability.

A District Judge may transfer to any Subordinate Judge under his administrative control any appeals pending before him from the decrees or orders before him. But an order of a Munsif under S. 476 refusing to prosecute a person under S. 193, Penal Code, is not an order of a Munsif within the meaning of S. 40, and the District Judge to whom the appeal from that order is preferred has no jurisdiction to transfer it, to be decided by a Subordinate Judge. PARTNERSHIP.*—Partners.

—Absent partner—Breach of license by one partner—Liability of absent partner—Nature of partnership liability.

Two excise licensees J. and T. who were partners in a country liquor shop license had been convicted under S. 64 (c) of the U.P. Excise Act 1910 of committing a breach of the conditions of the license by selling liquor out of the prescribed hours and also by selling adulterated liquor. T. was present at the shop when these offences were detected. J. the other licensee was not present and there was no suggestion that he knew anything about the irregular sales.

Held: that J's. conviction was right, he being equally guilty as T. (24 B. 423 and 9 A.L.J. 288 Ref.) The real test so far as agency is concerned is not the nature of the act but the nature of the business. The nature of the act is the test which decides the criminality. The law of partnership is merely a breach of the law of agency just like the law of master and servant, and for this purpose two partners stand to one another in the same relation as master and servant. (Walsh, J.) JWALA PRASAD v. KING-EMPEROR. 82 I.C. 139 = 45 All. 642 =

PATNA HIGH COURT RULES AND CIVIL CIRCULAR ORDERS.*—R. 83—Grounds for report.

The accused were caught in the act of taking away thatching grass which another person had cut earlier. On that person remonstrating accused struck him with lathi. The Magistrate convicted each of them under S. 379 and some under S. 323. Sessions Judge recommended to the High Court to set aside conviction on the ground that no theft was established and further also under S. 323 as the injuries were trifling. Evidence of the Civil Surgeon showed that hurt was actually caused.

Held: that the Magistrate had not committed any error of law in either of his convictions so as to justify a report under R. 83, Part 1, General Rules and the Circular Orders of the High Court and, there was no reason for interfering with decision of the trial Court. (James, J.) KISHUN KUMAR SINGH v. EMPEROR.

117 I.C. 646 = 30 Cr.L.J. 842.

—Ch. 17, R. 5-A—Criminal Case.

—Entering appearance by an Advocate—Unnecessary.

It has been the invariable practice in Patna High Court to allow advocates to appear and act for accused persons in criminal cases without any authority in writing. The new R. 5-A of Chapter 17 of the High Court Rules makes it obligatory for an advocate of the Patna High Court to file an appointment in writing in civil cases; but it does not in any way interfere with the practice in criminal cases. ## PENAL CODE (1860).

—Construction.

Natural meaning to be given.

The criminal law of India is prescribed by and so far as it goes is contained, in the Indian Penal Code; accordingly (as the Code itself shows) the criminal law of India and that of England differ in sundry respects; and the Code has first of all to be construed in accordance with its natural meaning and irrespective of any assumed intention on the part of its framers to leave unaltered the law as it existed before, (Lord Sumner.)

—Corporation.*—Damage to reputation—Not to mind or body.

A corporation cannot well suffer damage in mind or body. An incorporated company may have a reputation for the good conduct of the business or undertaking of the company and the company's reputation may be quite distinct from that of any. Punishment by imprisonment under Penal Code means that the offender shall go to jail and imprisonment till the rising of Court is evading the statute. (Jackson, J.) KUNHI BAVA v. EMPEROR.

—Right to prosecute.*—Not taken away by other statutes.

If there exists a right to prosecute under the Penal Code, such right cannot be impliedly taken away by the provisions of another statute: 22 Cal. 131, Dist. (Wallace, J.) MOLAIAPPA GOUNDAN v. EMPEROR. 115 I.C. 242=30 Cr. L.J. 432=

—Scope.*—Code complete in itself—Earlier case law may throw light but cannot add to.

The Indian Penal Code is meant to be a codifying statute, as a statute intended to be complete in itself with regard to the subject-matter with which it deals. No doubt a codifying statute does not exclude reference to earlier case-law on the subject covered by the statute for the purpose of throwing light on the true interpretation of the words of the statute where they are, or can be contended to be, open to rival constructions, but it cannot be argued that matter outside of the statute can be invoked, not by way of construing its provisions but of adding something to it which is admittedly not to be found within it. —S. 4—Completion in India.*—Foreigner—Triability.

Where a foreigner is charged with an offence under Penal Code, it is immaterial whether the accused person is bodily present in British India where the offence was completed, or whether his presence there is derived by process and intendment of law; in either case he is present in British India committing an offence under Penal Code, and that being so his character as a foreigner cannot avail him: 36 Bom. 524, Foll.: Rex v. De Marry, (1907) 1 K. B. 388; Rex v. Oliphant, (1905) 2 K. B. 67; Rex v. Keyn (1876) 2 Ex. D. 63; and Reg. v. Rogers, (1877) 3 Q. B. D. 28; Rel. on.; Macleod v. —S. 4—False Complaint in Foreign Court.—No offence.

There is no provision in the Code which constitutes it an offence to lodge a false complaint in a foreign Court (in this case the Court in Baroda State) or to give false evidence before such Court where the oath is not administered under the provisions of law in force in British India, but under the law of that state in relation to proceedings before that Court.

No offence under S. 182, Indian Penal Code, can be made out where it is not suggested that false information was given to a public servant as defined by the Indian Penal Code, quite apart from the consideration that it was given without and beyond British India. —S. 4—Foreigner.*—Brought over under Fugitive Offenders Act—Trial in British India not illegal.

A foreigner cannot be said to be brought illegally in British India in consequence of proceedings taken in England under the Fugitive Offenders Act, which were perfectly regular.

Where a man is in British India and he is charged before a Magistrate with an offence under the Penal Code, it will not avail him to say that he was brought there illegally from a foreign country: 35 Bom. 225, Foll.; Queen v. Nelson and Brand In re Parisot, (1889) 5 T.L.R. 344; Ex parte Scott, (1829) 9 B. & C. 446, Rel. on. (Wild, J. C. and Aston, A. J. C.) E. C. D. WHEELER v. EMPEROR. 112 I.C. 673=

—S. 23—"Wrongful".

Forcible entry—Right to use force must be present—Mere legal right to enter—Not sufficient.

Per Marten, J.—The word "wrongful" does not involve the idea that the dispossession has no legal right to the possession of the property. Even a rightful owner, for instance, a landlord who is entitled to possession in a case where his tenant is wrongfully holding over, can only take possession peaceably. If his possession is opposed, however wrongfully, then the landlord has no right to break down the doors, to assault the inmates and to turn them vi et armis out of the building. He must go to the civil Court and get the necessary warrants or ejectment orders to enable, if necessary, the proper authorities to effect a forcible entry or a forcible ejectment according to law. There is clear distinction between forcible entries which are rightful and forcible entries which are wrongful; and that depends on whether the person entering was entitled to use force, and not merely on

PENAL CODE (1860), S. 24—Dishonestly.

Per Pratt, J.—The phrase "forcibly and wrongfully" has the same meaning as forcible entry without due warrant of law under the English statute. A forcible entry must be wrongful unless it is in execution of a legal process. The word "wrongfully," therefore, means no more than "otherwise than in due course of law" in S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. (Fawcett and Madgavkar, JJ.) *BAI JIBA v. —S. 24—Dishonestly.

—Securing acquittal—By using forged document—Section applies.

Section 471 does not necessarily contemplate user for producing material gain or material loss to another as explained in S. 24 but it does apply to user for the purpose of securing an acquittal. Neither the acquisition nor the deprivation of property is an essential ingredient of the intent in an offence under S. 471. The obtaining of an acquittal is very distinctly the obtaining of an advantage and brings the case within the definition of "dishonestly" in S. 24. (Courtney-Terrell, C. J.) *BAJU GHA v. —Not exhaustively defined—Intention to cause loss or gain.

Section 24 is not an exhaustive definition of the word "dishonestly." The section does not say that the word "dishonestly" is applicable only when there is an intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person but properly construed means that cases of intention of causing such wrongful gain or loss are to be considered as coming within the wider class of dishonest actions. (Courtney-Terrell, C. J.) BAJU GHA v. EMPEROR. 110 I.C. 712=9 P.L.T. 800=30 Cr. L.J. 236=12 A.I. Cr. R. 236=A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 60.

—Deprivation of property—Not a necessary element.

The expression "intent to defraud" implies deceit and consequent injury or intended injury, i.e., the infringement or intended infringement of some legal right possessed by the person deceived. It does not necessarily imply that the person deceived should be deprived of property. It includes deceit which causes or is likely to cause any damage or harm to the person deceived, in respect of his property or otherwise. (Jai

—Causing loss not necessary.

In order to do a thing fraudulently it is not necessary that the person doing it should intend, or the doing of it should have the necessary consequence of, causing wrongful loss to any person. It is sufficient if the doing of it is intended to defraud some one without ultimately acquiring unlawful gain or causing wrongful loss. Each of the assailants may know that the act, they are jointly doing, is one that is likely to cause death but have no intention of causing death, yet they may certainly have the common intention to do that act and therefore S. 34 can apply to a case under S. 304, Part 2. —S. 34—"Criminal Act done by several persons."

—Expression explained.

Per Cuming J.—It is impossible to conceive two individuals doing identically the same act. Such a thing is impossible. Therefore to have any meaning, the expression "Criminal act done by several persons" must contemplate an act which can be divided into parts each part being executed by a different person, the whole making up the criminal act which was the common intention of all. To put it in another way, the one criminal act may be regarded as made up of a number of acts done by the individual conspirators, the result of their individual acts being the criminal act which was the common intention of them all. The expression "criminal act done by several persons" includes the case of a number of persons acting together for a common object and each doing some act in furtherance of the final result, which various acts make up the final act. The charge framed against the accused was, that of being members of an unlawful assembly whose common object was mischief and hurt. In the course of evidence it appeared that some two or three of the accused beat some of the prosecution witnesses, entered their houses and carried off some articles. On this the accused were convicted of dacoity under Section 395, Indian Penal Code.

Held that on the facts of the case a conviction for dacoity can be sustained only by the application of Sections 34 and 149, Indian Penal Code and it was necessary to charge and prove that the assembly as a whole had for its common object the committing of dacoity or that each of the members knew that dacoity was likely to be committed in the prosecution of their common object; and that there having been no such charge the conviction for dacoity was bad and illegal. One accused cannot therefore be held responsible for the act of the other. (Tapp, J.) DHANWANT SINGH v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 495.

The crime of conspiracy is completely committed the moment two or more have agreed that they will do, at once or at some future time certain things. It is not necessary in order to complete the offence that any one thing should be done beyond the agreement. It is complete when they agreed. An offence under S. 34, I.P.C. is committed only when there is a common intention to commit a particular Act. (Crump, J.) EMPEROR v. SHAFI AHMAD. 31 Bom. L.R. 515.

—Common intention—Aiding or abetting by presence or otherwise in furtherance of—Liable for offence.

The question whether a particular criminal act may be properly held to have been "done by several persons" within the meaning of the section cannot be answered regardless of the facts of the case. In order to convict a person for an offence with the aid of the provisions of S. 34 it is not necessary that that person should actually with his own hand commit the criminal act. If several persons have the common intention of doing a particular criminal act and if in furtherance of that common intention all of them join together and aid or abet each other in the commission of the act, then although one of these persons may not actually with his own hand do the act, but if he helps by his presence or by other acts in the commission of the act, he would be held to have done that act within the meaning of S. 34. Held: that a conviction under S. 325 read with S. 34 would not be sustainable without a clear finding that the accused were acting in furtherance of a common intention. (Sen, J.) BHABATARAM MAHTO v. EMPEROR. 90 I.C. 705=7 P.L.T. 388=26 Cr. L.J. 1601=1925 P.H.C.G. 278=A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 706.

—Common intention—Acts though several are all done in furtherance of.

Per Mookerjee and Richardson, JJ.—To justify the application of S. 34 it is necessary to prove what may be briefly described as a common act and a common intention which will define the expression "a criminal act is done" when there is more than one person who has contributed to the result. It is not possible to frame a universal formula which will comprehend all imaginable combinations of circumstances.

Per Richardson, J.—S. 34 regards the act done as the united act of the immediate perpetrator and his confederates present at the time and the language used is susceptible of that meaning.

To put it differently, an act is done by several persons when all are principals in the doing of it, and it is immaterial whether they are principals in the first degree or principals in the second degree, no distinction between the two categories being recognised.

Per C. C. Ghose, J.—When a criminal act is done, that is, brought about or carried out by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act, in the same manner as if it were done or brought about or carried out by him alone. (Mookerjee, Richardson, C.C., Ghosh, Cuming, and Page, JJ.) EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE. 81 I.C. 353=28 C.W.N. 170=38 C.L.J. 411=25 Cr. L.J. 817=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 287 (F.B.)

—S. 34—Grievous hurt.

—Common intention to cause hurt—Joint attack—All liable—Conviction of one under S. 325 illegal.

Where it is found that all the accused persons joined in inflicting injuries upon the complainant and that grievous hurt to him was caused in furtherance of the common intention of all, the Court can apply S. 34, I.P.C. and find all the accused guilty of an offence under S. 325, I.P.C. But one of the accused cannot be convicted under S. 326, I.P.C., if the evidence shows that he caused only one injury which was in itself grievous hurt and the grievous hurt was the result of the aggregate of 26 injuries caused by all the accused. (Curgenven, J.) SANNA REDDI, In re. 113 I.C. 455=30 Cr.L.J. 167.

—Result of several simple injuries—All are liable for the major offence.

Where several persons join in inflicting injuries upon a man and grievous hurt is caused to him in furtherance of the common intention of all, they are all guilty of causing him grievous hurt under S. 325, although the grievous hurt is the result of the aggregate of several simple injuries. S. 34, can be rightly applied in such a case. (Curgenven, J.) SANNA REDDI v. EMPEROR. 113 I.C. 455=30 Cr.L.J. 167=2 M. Cr. C. 74=12 A.I.Cr.R. 70.

—Common intent of forcible abduction—Arms carried—All are liable.

When a number of persons join together to forcibly carry off a girl while she is actually sleeping in her own house, and proceed to do so armed with dangs or chhavis, it is quite justifiable to assume that all of them had the knowledge that it might be necessary to use the dangs and chhavis they were armed with, and that the use of such weapons would in all probability result in grievous hurt being caused to persons attempting to prevent the girl being carried off, and therefore, if, as a matter of fact, in the course of the attempt, grievous hurt is caused to victims, friends and relatives, all the accused must be regarded as being responsible for the grievous nature of the hurt caused. —S. 34—Intention.

—Common intention and common object distinguished.

There is a difference between object and intention; for though the object of an unlawful assembly is common, the intentions of the several members may differ and indeed may be similar only in the respect that they are all unlawful while the element of participation in action which is the leading feature of S. 34, is replaced in S. 149 by membership of the assembly at the time of the committing of the offence. Both sections deal with combinations of persons, who become punishable as sharers in an offence. Thus they have a certain resemblance and may to some extent overlap, but S. 149 cannot at any rate relegate S. 34 to the position of dealing only with joint action by the commission of identically similar criminal acts a kind of case which is not in itself deserving of separate treatment at all. —S. 34—Interpretation.

—Common intention and common object distinguished.

The words "common intention" in S. 34 have not the same meaning as "common object" in Ss. 146 and 149. The object of an assembly as a whole may not be the same as the intention which several persons may have when in pursuance of that intention they perform a criminal act and it may well be that the object of the assembly was lawful whereas the intention common to those of the assembly who jointly committed a criminal act was in itself criminal and joint criminal act must be equally imputed to all of them. 52 Cal. 197 (P.C.), Rel. on. —Rule explained.

The doing to death of one person at the hands of several by blows or stabs under circumstances in which it can never be known which blow or blade actually extinguished life, if indeed one only produced that result is common in criminal experience and the impossibility of doing justice, if the crime in such case is the crime of attempted murder only has been generally felt. It is not often that a case is found where several shots can be proved and yet there is only one wound but even in such circumstances it is obvious that the rule ought to be the same as in the wider class unless the words of the code clearly negative it. Of course questions arise in such cases as to the extent to which the common intention and the common contemplation of gravest consequence may have gone and participation in a joint crime as distinguished from mere presence at the scene of its commission is often a matter not easy to decide in complex states of fact, but the rule is one that has never left the Indian Courts in much doubt. 21 A. 263, 29 C. 495, 35 Cal. 659, 35 A. 329, 41 C. 154, Appr. —Threatening to ask complainant, in Criminal Trial, scandalous and indecent questions amounts to offence under S. 385.

The word "illegal" has been given in S. 43 a very wide meaning and it has the same meaning as unlawful. To constitute an offence under S. 385 the threat need not necessarily be of some conduct which might either constitute an offence in Criminal Law or which might be made the basis of a Civil action.

F, a Mukhtar who appeared on behalf of an accused S who was being tried for theft, threatened the prosecutor H to put questions to H and the ladies of his household in cross examination which were entirely irrelevant to the matters at issue, which were scandalous and indecent and intended to insult and annoy H, unless H paid him some money, in which case the case would be withdrawn.

—Separate sentences under S. 147 and under S. 325 read with S. 149 are legal when they are made to run concurrently—Order of the sentences is not material in deciding the legality of the respective sentences, (contra Sanderson C.J.)

An accused was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 147, I.P.C. and a further 3 years under S. 325 read with S. 149 and both sentences were to run concurrently.

Held (Per Sanderson, C.J.)—That the infliction of separate punishments for the two offences was illegal under para 1 of S. 71, I.P.C. and it did not make any difference that the sentences were directed to run concurrently. The sentence under S. 325 read with S. 149 must therefore be set aside 16 C. 442 F.B. foll.

(Per Cuming, J.)—Where two separate sentences have been passed the illegality does not necessarily attach to the sentence which is passed second in point of time. Obviously this would possibly reduce the question as to what sentence the accused would get to a lottery depending on the order in which the Judge or Magistrate passed the sentences and result in a serious miscarriage of justice. The prohibition in S. 71, I.P.C. against punishing an accused with the punishment of more than one of the offences is obviously met by making all the sentences which have been imposed run concurrently. A previous conviction of the accused in a non-British Indian Court like that of a Magistrate in a native state cannot be proved in a British Indian Court for purposes of S. 75, I.P.C. If however on information given by the police the Magistrate questions the accused as regards the previous conviction and the accused admits the same the court may consider the same in awarding sentence. —Enhanced convicted under S. 326, Penal Code—Previous conviction under the same section—Magistrate can take into consideration the previous conviction at the time of awarding sentence independently of S. 75.

In many cases in which the law does not prescribe enhanced maximum punishment for a second conviction, it is nevertheless necessary to pass a severe sentence because the offender has been previously convicted of a similar offence or some other offence indicating moral turpitude.

It is the duty of a Court, whenever a previous conviction not coming under S. 75 is brought to its notice, to consider the nature of the conviction and if it is of opinion that it constitutes a proper ground for passing a severer sentence than the Court would otherwise pass for the offence for which the accused is being tried, it should take evidence as to the previous conviction and it may enter the previous conviction in the charge in order that the accused may understand that it will be taken into consideration in passing the sentence. When an accused person has had a certain number of previous convictions against him, it is not in accordance with enlightened ideas of the administration of criminal justice to sentence him to transportation for life for the commission of a subsequent offence which is trivial in itself though of course the previous record of the prisoner is an element which the Court should take into consideration in substantially increasing the punishment for a subsequent offence. Unsoundness of mind—Insanity to amount to unsoundness of mind within S. 84 must be such that the person is incapable of understanding the nature of the act.

The mere presence of five circumstances, viz.: (1) the absence of any motive, (2) the absence of secrecy, (3) multiple murders, (4) want of pre-arrangement, and (5) want of accomplices does not fulfil the requirements of S. 84. A man may be suffering from insanity in the sense in which the words would be used by an alienist, but may not be suffering from unsoundness of mind as defined in S. 84. The law recognizes nothing but incapacity to realize the nature of the act, and presumes that where a man's mind or his faculties of ratiocination are sufficiently clear to apprehend what he is doing he must always be presumed to intend the consequences of the action he takes: (Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ.) MANI RAM v. Insanity—Defence of—Quantum of proof.

To establish a defence on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it, that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong. If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do and if that act was at the time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable. The standard to be applied is whether according to the ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men the act was right or wrong. (C. C. Ghose and Jack, JJ.) BAZLUR RAHMAN v. EMPEROR.

—Insanity—Plea of Prior and Subsequent Conduct—Relevancy.

In considering the plea of insanity the antecedents and the subsequent conduct of the man are no doubt relevant to show what was the state of the mind of the accused at the time the act was committed, but the state of the mind at the time of doing the act is the chief thing to be taken into consideration.

Where the evidence given did not go to the length of showing that the accused could not be conscious of the nature of the act he was doing at the time of the occurrence, but only proved that the accused was in a bewildered state of mind a day or two before the day of the occurrence:

—Motive—Apparent absence—No ground for inference.

The circumstance of an act being apparently motiveless is not a ground from which the existence of a powerful and irresistible influence of homicidal tendency can be safely inferred. The law recognizes nothing but incapacity to realize the nature of the act and presumes that where a man's mind or faculties of ratiocination are sufficiently clear to apprehend what he is doing, he must always be presumed to intend the consequences of the action he takes: *Reg v. The circumstance of the convict having acted under an irresistible influence to the commission of the offence is no defence if at the time he committed the act he knew he was doing what was wrong. Absence of sane motive is one of the indicia of the act being done by some kind of insane impulse.

In the same afternoon the accused murdered N. and his wife when they were returning home. There was also absence of motive. —Insanity of accused to be determined from circumstances.

In a case of murder by an insane person the circumstances were: There was no motive for the murder, the appellant made no attempt to disappear after the murder, or to offer any explanation in extenuation of his crime. His words at the time of arrest were "Arrest me, I have shed blood". He took no interest in the inquiry prior to committal and the very first time the Medical Officer saw him he was found to be quite insane. For months prior to the occurrence he had shown symptoms of insanity and it was after a stay of nearly a year in the Lunatic Asylum that he was considered to be in a fit state to undergo his trial.

Held that the inference seemed irresistible that the appellant had been in a continuous state of insanity and whatever act he did, he did in an irresponsible way and did not know the nature thereof or that it was wrong if it happened to be a wrong act according to law. It is for the jury to determine whether the prisoner, when he committed the offence with which he stood charged, was incapable of distinguishing right from wrong or under the influence of any delusion which rendered his mind at the moment insensible of the nature of the act he was about to commit, since in that case he would not be legally responsible for his conduct. It is a mistake to suppose that in order to satisfy a jury that the plea of insanity is well-founded, scientific evidence must be adduced. discipline by the parent or guardian would come within the scope of S. 89 provided it was inflicted in good faith for the benefit of the child. And when a child is sent by its parent or guardian to a school, the parent or guardian must be held to have given an implied consent to the infliction of such reasonable punishment as may be necessary for the purposes of school discipline. Limits within which the power of the school-master extends to inflict punishment for offences committed out of school depend largely on the facts of each case whether the school-master had authority to act : Cleary v. Booth, (1893) 1 Q. B. 465, Appl.

A school-master was charged under S. 323 for caning one of the school-boys who the master believed had assaulted another school-boy. The circumstances were that the school was closed for two days. The boys, but for an accident, would have actually been attending night school at the time the assault was committed and the boy who was assaulted was on the scene because he had been called by another boy to visit his master, and it was presumably as pupils of the school that the boys had collected together on the road, and a direct complaint was made to the school-master by the mother of the boy who was assaulted.

Held : in the circumstances it was a reasonable inference that the implied consent of the parents of the boy to his being under the discipline and control of the school-master extended to the alleged offence for which the school-master found it necessary to punish him, and that the boy must be held at the time to have been under the authority of the school-master. People of the village S having assembled, proceeded to cut the bandh. People of village K resisted but were turned back. Meanwhile a large crowd collected on both sides, armed with lathis, spears, and garases. People of K, seeing that the people of S were not likely to listen to their remonstrances, proceeded in a body to prevent them from cutting the bandh and to drive them away. A free fight ensued ; one man from village S. received mortal injuries and died on his way to the hospital. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused who were residents of K under S. 302 read with Ss. 147, 148 and 149, L.P.C.

Held : that the people of S had no right to cut the bandh under the circumstances mentioned and when they actually proceeded to destroy it the people of K had certainly a right to prevent them from doing so.

Held : further that the people of K had erected a Bandh in their own village and at the time of the occurrence they were in possession of the bandh and there had been no lawful order passed by any competent Court directing them or authorising people of K to remove the bandh. This being so it was not unlawful on the part of the appellant to prevent the people of S. from forcibly cutting the bandh, and that consequently their convictions under Ss. 147, 148 and 149, could not be sustained.

Held : also that under the circumstances of the case

In considering a plea of self-defence it is not the triviality of the injuries inflicted upon the accused that has to be taken into consideration nor is it a question whether the accused had any injuries at all on him. But the question is whether the accused had any reasonable apprehension of grievous hurt or death to himself. Where the evidence showed that it was the accused who used violence first and that after the deceased fled from the spot he pursued him and thereupon the deceased attacked him with a knife and the accused then killed him with a knife, held, that the accused having put the deceased in that position, he cannot be exonerated from all liability, because of the plea of self-defence, and that he was liable to be convicted for culpable homicide though not for murder. ### —S. 99—Extent of Right.

—Test—Extent—Person assaulted is entitled to carry on his defence till he finds himself out of danger—In cases of dangerous assaults allowance should be made if the right is a little exceeded—Possibility of carrying out the threat should always be considered.

Where right of private defence is pleaded the essence of the case should be to ascertain who was the aggressor and whether the accused party acted in the exercise of his or their right of private defence or otherwise. But man who is assaulted is not bound to modulate the defence step by step according to the attack before there is reason to believe that the attack is over. He is entitled to secure his victory as long as the contest is continued. He is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary till he finds himself out of danger; and if in any conflict between them he happens to kill, such killing is justifiable. And of course, where the assault assumed a dangerous form every allowance should be made for one who with the instinct of self-preservation strong upon him, pursues his defence a little further than to a perfectly cool bystander would seem absolutely necessary. The question in such cases will be not whether there was an actually continuing danger, but whether there was any reasonable apprehension of such danger. It must, however, be remembered that every attempt or threat to commit the offence would not, much less an idle threat would, entitle a man to take up arms. He must pause and reflect whether the threat is intended to be put into execution immediately because there are many threats which people use as a form of abuse, but which are never intended to be taken seriously, and, still others, of which the persons saying them, have not the capacity to put into immediate execution for it is only against a danger present and imminent that the right of private defence avails. Under proper circumstances exaggeration of the danger that the accused was facing will not be unreasonable and law will always make just allowance for the sentiment of a person placed in situation of peril, who has no time to think. His blood is then hot and his sole object is to strike a decisive blow so as to ward off the danger. But Courts should not at the same time forget that the right of private defence is a very limited right. It cannot be converted into a right of reprisal. (Kinkhede, A. J. C.) SITARAM v. EMPEROR.

and under the circumstances he is justified in firing at his assailants and in continuing to fire if the attack went on. Facts unknown to the person assailed at the time of the attack, but proved before the Court at the trial should not be taken into account and made the basis for finding against the plea of self-defence. The law does not require that the person placed in such circumstances should weigh the arguments for and against "in golden scales." It is unnatural to expect a man to do so and the law in fact does not require any such thing from such person. A man cannot, in any case, justify killing another by pretence of necessity unless he were wholly without fault in bringing that necessity upon himself. In order to establish the exercise of the right of private defence, it is absolutely necessary to detail the exact circumstances which led the accused to strike the blow in question. —Right of private defence is available also while preventing the entry of theft.

Under S. 103 the right of private defence of property to the extent of causing death arises not only when the house is broken into but when an attempt is made to break into the house. It is not the intention of the law that the right to defend property is available only when the thief has already effected entry, for property may be protected by attacking the thief inside the house as much as by preventing his entry into it.

A person who, under a mistake of fact kills a person while that person is attempting to enter the accused's house, thinking him to be a burglar while he is not a burglar, does not exceed his right of private defence of property and he is not guilty of any offence. 1 Holes P.C. 42, Fol. Held: that notice of trespass being taken at once, the mere fact that the cattle had left the land, before they could be seized, did not deprive the owner of the field of the right of seizure conferred upon him by S. 10, Cattle Trespass Act, and no case for private defence was proved: A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 50, Dist (Shadilal, C. —S. 105—Extent of right.

—Right of private defence of property ceases after the offender has effected his retreat, or before the retreat, property is recovered, or assistance of public authority is obtained—After retreat is effected the right cannot again revive whenever the property is traced.

As soon as the offender has effected his retreat with the property, no right of private defence of that property against theft subsists but, until the offender has so completed his retreat the right of private defence of that property continues until the property has been recovered, i.e., during the retreat of the offender, or until the assistance of the public authorities is obtained. Right of defence cannot be revived so as to allow stolen property, whenever seen again in the possession of anybody, may be taken by owner from that person by the use of all the violence not extending to the causing of death which may be found necessary. The reason why a person is permitted to take the law into his own hands during the retreat of a thief with stolen property is that there is no doubt regarding the identity of the thief and the right to the property; also because the owner of the property is entitled to maintain his possession and to prevent the completion of the removal of the property from his possession. A very different state of things, however, arises if the owner of a stolen article be permitted to take the law into his own hands at any subsequent time and to use violence against any person who may or may not be an innocent holder in order to retrieve from his possession similar article which may or may not be the one stolen. If serious disorders are to be avoided the right of private defence must be strictly confined within the limits fixed by statute. 3 N.L.R. 177, Dissented. (Le Rosignol and Fforde, J.J.) MIR DAD v. Per Richardson, J.—S. 114 would appear to serve two purposes. Firstly, it marks the fact that where it can be proved that the accused, if absent, would be liable as an abettor, his mere presence when the offence is committed is, without more sufficient proof of common intention, to make him an accessory at the fact or principal. Secondly, it marks the fact that in those circumstances the accused cannot be punished twice, once for the abetment and once for being present as an accessory at the fact. —Overt act is not necessary to base conviction unless agreement is not to commit an offence—Common intention is necessary—Persons doing unlawful acts in furtherance of common object but without knowledge of conspiracy are not guilty.

Conspiracy is a substantive offence and has nothing to do with abetment. Though an overt act may be specified in the charge yet this is not (except when the end of the conspiracy is not to commit an offence) necessary. It may be specified in a charge that a certain act has been committed which could not possibly be committed by one of the alleged conspirators, nevertheless such conspirator may be guilty of that conspiracy in the course of which such act was committed. It is not by any means necessary that each conspirator should be aware of all the acts done by each of the conspirators in the course of the conspiracy. His offence is the conspiracy. The acts done by any of the conspirators in furtherance of the purpose of the conspiracy are relevant as merely indication of what the object of the conspiracy was.

What is necessary, however, is that there should be one conspiracy and not a series of conspiracies and criminal acts unconnected by unity of intention. It may be that for the purpose of conspiracy it may be necessary to procure the doing of unlawful acts by persons who are not members of the conspiracy. Where the charge is that there was an agreement between several accused to cheat such members of the public as they could defraud by deceitful means, it is not a bad charge. It is also immaterial if all the accused had concocted in the scheme of the charge or that all of them should have originated it. It is sufficient if it originated with some of them and others had subsequently joined the original conspirators; R. v. Murphy, (1838) 8 C. and P. 297, Ref.

It is open to the Crown to prove the conspiracy by direct evidence, or by proof of circumstances from which the Court may presume the conspiracy. The fact that criminal acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy were in themselves substantive offences casts no obligation on the Crown to prosecute the individual offenders for such specific offences or deprive the Crown of its right to proceed against all of them for conspiracy pure and simple. —Agreement of parties makes offence complete—Conspiracy to possess firearms—Conspiracy in respect of particular fire arms need not be proved.

An offence under S. 120-B consists in the conspiracy without any reference to the subject-matter of the conspiracy.

It is true that the law does not take notice of the intention or the state of mind of the offender and there must be some overt act to give expression to that intention, but that overt act in a case of conspiracy under S. 120-B consists in the agreement of the parties; Mulcahy v. The Queen, (L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 1868), Rel. on.

The definition of conspiracy in S. 120-B excludes the agreement to commit an offence, from the category of such conspiracies, in which it is necessary that the agreement should be followed by some act. It is not therefore necessary in a case of conspiracy to possess firearms, for the prosecution to specify in the charge or to prove that the accused conspired to possess any particular firearms: 42 Cal. 957, Rel. on. —Speech in which the speaker approves of violence as means of achieving self Government amounts to offence under S. 124-A.

A speech in which the speaker exhorts his audience to persuade Congress to alter their constitutional policy of non-violence into a policy of anarchy is intended to excite disaffection towards the established Government and amounts to an offence under S. 124-A. To advise a person to persuade others to adopt violence as a means of attaining a political goal is no less objectionable than advising that person to commit violence himself for that purpose. In either case the advice is to pursue a course of action which is calculated to disturb the tranquillity of the State. It is a recommendation to oppose the established Government by force. Such a speech as a whole is obviously calculated to cause disaffection towards the Government established by law and the speaker must be deemed to have that intent. (Fforde, J.) ANAND KISHORE v. Conditions at present in India are quite different from those which existed in 1897 and far greater freedom is given to the press now than was given in those days and things which may now be said and written with impunity would have been treated as seditious at the end of the last century. But we have to consider the state of the minds of the people at present and the present conditions and to decide whether this article is now likely to engender feelings of hatred, enmity or disloyalty in the minds of the readers.

The ascription to the Government of the object as a root principle to divide the races of India so as to strengthen its rule and to destroy the language, culture, trade, commerce, arts and industries by strangling regulations, as well as the description of the Government as a Government which rules by brute force in an arbitrary manner over a people who have no voice in the administration cannot fail to cause a feeling of disaffection and contempt if not hatred in the mind of the Indian reader.

Even the adoption of a phrase like the "Punjab atrocities" may be seditious if the intention is to stir up disaffection against Government though that phrase may be commonly used by portions of the public. Any advocacy for change in Government that brings present Government into hatred etc., comes within section.

The words used by the legislature in S. 124-A are the "Government established by law in British India." The section does not contemplate the probability of attempts being made to excite hatred and contempt against abstractions, but uses a clear phrase for a definite thing and, therefore, it is no defence to say that the attempt to excite hatred and contempt was directed solely against the particular form of Government now obtaining in India and not against the fact of the Government. It is of course open to a writer to criticize any policy of the Government as permitted by Explanations to S. 124-A but if he proceeds to attribute base motives to Government of having deliberately ruined the subjects etc., he will be liable to be punished under S. 124-A.

Where the article as a whole is calculated to bring the British Imperialists, whose policy is criticised, into hatred and contempt and there are clearly references to the acts of Government of India leading to the inference that the Government of India is included among the Imperialists an offence under S. 124-A is committed. (Bhide, J.) ARJAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 129=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 186.

—Where allegations bring Government to hatred and contempt, writer is guilty.

An article in a newspaper contained following paragraph: "Under their rule the English have displayed such acts of oppression, highhandedness, excesses, tyranny, repression and dishonesty as are making the world civilization feel ashamed. English rule in India depends upon those bad characters of number 10 of England who have become notorious for their folly, barbarity and hard heartedness. Such cruel, unmannerly and foolish persons are sent as officers of this country as might be considered burdensome for England's soil. This is the reason why the general massacre of Julianwala Bagh, the bloody field of Guru-ka-Bagh and the Karbalas and bloody scenes of Nankana Sahib and Jaito are being seen in India."

Held: that the object of the article was evidently to bring the Government into hatred and contempt and to threaten it with vengeance and destruction. The writer was therefore guilty of offence under S. 124 (2). (Bhide, J.) LACHHMAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 164=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 156.

—Publication bringing British Government into hatred etc., in any form whatever amounts to offence.

If the subject matter of a publication is likely to bring Government into hatred or contempt or excite disaffection towards it and if it has been published with the intention of producing such effect, it would be immaterial for the purpose of S. 124-A whether the publication assumes the form of a life-sketch or a poem or an allegory or some other form.

The publishing of the life sketch of a person who was admittedly a member of a society whose avowed object was to overthrow the Government established by law in British India is an offence under S. 124 when no reasonable explanation is forthcoming as to why the author thought it fit at that particular time to publish the life sketch. The crucial point for decision in such case is the intention with which the life sketch has been published which is to be gathered —Speech professing non-violence, but covertly praising violence—Offence.

It is true that the gist of the offence under S. 124-A lies in the intention of the speaker or writer. But intention is connected with consequences. To intend a thing is to act in such a way as to expect that certain consequences would follow. Intention, therefore, is correlated with the natural consequences which would follow from a particular act. Where a person says in his speech that he himself is the follower of the precept of non-violence but at the same time says that he is nobody to find fault with people who in their anger at oppression as is witnessed under the present Government use more violent methods and shoot at members of the Assembly and where throughout his speech he insinuates various disabilities of village life to be due to the present Government, there is an intention on his part to bring the Government into hatred and he commits the offence under S. 124-A. (Dalal, J.) V. S. DANDEKAR v. EMPEROR. 122 I.C. 596=11 L.R.A.Cr. 40=13 A.I.Cr.R. 214=31 Cr. L.J. 429=A.I.R. 1930 All. 324.

—Intention how to be inferred—Rule stated.

Intention is essential to the offence under S. 124-A and in fact the essence of the crime of sedition consists in the intention with which the language is used and although in inferring the intention the principle that a man must be presumed to intend the natural and reasonable consequences of his action must be applied, the articles should be read in a fair, free and a liberal spirit and if any doubt should arise in regard to the intention, the benefit of that doubt should be given to the accused. Consequently if on reading through the articles and having regard to time, place, circumstances and occasion for publication, the reasonable, natural and probable effect on the minds of people to whom they are addressed, appears to be that feelings of hatred, contempt or dissatisfaction would be excited towards the Government, then it is justifiable to say that the articles are written with that intent and that they are an attempt to create the feelings against which the law seeks to provide. 22 Bom. 122; 2 Bom. Where an article exceeded all the limits of fair and reasonable criticism, vilified the police as a body, in the most approbrious language and contained a threat or warning to Government that if the police continue to act as they have in the past the Empire will be brought to ruin, it must be concluded that the article was clearly intended to create feelings of hostility to Government and create disaffection: 2 Bom. —The gist of the offence under S. 124-A lies in the intention of the writer to bring into hatred and contempt the Government and is not to be gathered from isolated or stray passages here and there but from a fair and generous reading of the article as a whole. Further, in gathering the intention allowance must be made for a certain amount of latitude for writers in the public press. (Addison, J.) RAMCHANDRA v. EMPEROR. 108 I.C. 372=10 A.I. Cr. R. 18=

29 Cr. L.J. 381 (Lah.)

—Intentional attempt to rouse feeling of disaffection must exist—Meaning of language used, as understood by the readers, is the meaning of the writer.

The law as codified in India in S. 124-A represents in substance the English Law of sedition, although it is much more compressed and more distinctly expressed.

In a charge under S. 124-A, the prosecution must prove to the hilt that the intention of the writer or the speaker, whoever he may be, is to bring or attempt to bring into hatred or contempt or excite or attempt to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. The essence of the crime of sedition, therefore, consists in the intention with which the language is used. What is rendered punishable by S. 124-A is the intentional attempt, successful or otherwise, to rouse as against Government the feelings enumerated in the section, and a mere tendency in an article to promote such feelings is not sufficient to justify a conviction.

The intention of a writer or a speaker, however, has to be gathered from the language used in the particular article or speech which is the subject-matter of the charge. When a man is charged in respect of anything that he has written, the meaning of what he wrote must be taken to be his meaning and that meaning is what his language would be understood to mean by the people to whom it is addressed. PENAL CODE (1860), S. 124-A—Intention.

Intention will be presumed from language and conduct of accused who must rebut presumption.

Intention is an essential element in the offence of sedition, though the section does not expressly say so. It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove the intention directly by evidence which in most cases would be impracticable. The law will presume the intention, whether good or bad, from the language and conduct of the accused, and it will be then for him to show that his words were harmless and his motives innocent.

The article was written in Gurmukhi at the time when the relations between the Government and the Sikhs were very much strained. The Government was therein charged with having resorted to various excesses in order to humiliate the Sikh community. Its policy was designated as a double-faced policy and it was insinuated that in order to gain its ulterior objects the Government had not hesitated to disregard even the religious scruples and prejudices of the Sikh community.

Books intended to educate public opinion—No offence.

A book or report published in England like Ramsay MacDonald's "Awakening of India" or a despatch of the Secretary of State is intended to inform the public in England of this day about the state of affairs in India and it can have no intention of causing disaffection in this country or of bringing the Government established in this country into contempt. Those publications would in any case come under one of the two explanations even if published in India. (Adami and Macpherson, JJ.) NAGESWAR PRASAD v. EMPEROR.

Intention to cause disaffection is necessary.

Court must look to the real intention and spirit of the article. It has to see whether the general tendency of the article is such as to show an intention to excite the feelings mentioned in the section. The amount or intensity of the disaffection is absolutely immaterial, for if a man excites or attempts to excite feelings of disaffection at all even in the smallest degree, he is guilty under the section. The class of paper in which the article appears and the class of people among whom it will be circulated are important points. Though the ultimate object of the writer may be unobjectionable, if explaining that object, he uses language which is likely to bring the Government into contempt or to excite disaffection, S. 124-A will apply. A Historical article—Suppression and consistent avoiding truth or anything that is in Government's favour amounts to sedition.

No exception can be taken to an article so far as it sets forth in chronological sequence the various landmarks in India's struggle for independence. But if the writer does not content himself with a mere recapitulation of events but in places makes comments which indicate that his purpose was not merely to appeal to the interest of his readers in a historical retrospect but evinces further object of inflaming opinion against the Government, specially when the striking feature of the articles is consistently one-sided studiously avoiding and suppressing the truth or anything that goes in favour of the Government, the article comes within the mischief of S. 124. Vilification of Government by contrast—Offence.

It is one thing to hold up an admired character as a pattern in a speech and quite another to vilify the British by contrast; but a speaker cannot be allowed to use the former as a cloak for the latter if the result of what he says in fact be to inspire his audience with hatred and disaffection towards Government. If an article constitutes an offence under S. 124-A, the fact that it was not written by the editor does not affect the question of his guilt whatever effect it may have on the question of sentence.

When therefore an editor, though not the author of an article falling under S. 124-A is willing to take the responsibility which is legally his, but adds that he published it at a time of stress when he was not in a position to fully discharge his liability as an editor and publisher, he deserves to be treated leniently, specially when the policy of the newspaper ordinarily is in favour of non-violence. A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 751.

—Words used should be construed liberally.

The expression in the section "calculated to bring into hatred or contempt or excite or attempt to excite disaffection" must, as a rule of construction, be very narrowly construed so as to interfere as little as possible with the liberty of the subject and the freedom of speech. If a party publishes any matter in a newspaper and it contains no more than a calm, dispassionate and quiet discussion showing possibly a little feeling in the man's mind, that will not be seditious; but if the article goes beyond and attributes improper and dishonest or corrupt motive and thereby is calculated to excite tumult then it is seditious.

While a very large amount of latitude is and must be allowed to writers in the public press, the interests of the State must at the same time, be not lost sight of and writers cannot under the guise of criticism of public affairs, be allowed to indulge in attributing base, improper or dishonest motives to those who carry on the work of the Government of the country. —Knowledge can be presumed from circumstances.

Knowledge by a printer of the nature of the matter printed is a question to be determined on the particular facts of a particular case.

—Complaint under S. 124-A, Penal Code—Alleged speech not attached, nor mentioned in complainant's statement—Complaint held not proper.

A complaint was filed under Penal Code, S. 124-A but no original or translation of alleged speech was attached to it. Sanction of the Local Government required under S. 196, Cr. P. Code, was attached. Although in the sanction order attached to the complaint a short abstract of the words used was given, it was not mentioned by the complainant in his statement. On application by the accused for granting bail the Magistrate refused bail.

Held: that there was no proper complaint and the Magistrate did not direct his mind to question of presence or absence of proper complaint and the order refusing bail was not passed on proper appreciation of the facts and non-bailable warrants should not have been issued. Where the accused reproduced in this paper an article in another paper which was headed 'Swaraj or death' and which was seditious, Held that the accused was liable to be convicted under S. 124-A and the fact that he copied the articles and that the writer of the original article was not convicted, though good ground for passing a lesser sentence, did not exculpate the accused from guilt. Held also that the fact that the accused aimed at weaning the members from the council would also be a mitigating circumstance as regards the sentence. —S. 141—"Assembly".

When two or more mobs start from different localities, operate independently and never mingle together at any time or place, the mere fact that they have a common intention will not make them one assembly. —S. 141—Charge under.

The charge of unlawful assembly with the common object of 'harassing Hindus' is not too general and unfair or unjust to the accused. It is not sufficient to prove that the common object of the accused's party was to compel the complainant by means of force to omit, for the time being, to do a certain act. —S. 141—Enforcement of right.

In a village an agreement had been entered into by leaders of Hindus and Mahomedans that the former would not slaughter pigs and the latter would not slaughter cows in public places. This agreement was observed by both parties for about a year. Later on, a mob of Hindus, suspecting that Mahomedans were going to slaughter a cow in a certain place, assembled in a large number with lathis, etc. It was argued that their common object, if at all, was to maintain a right which they had enjoyed for a long time.

—Immediate purpose to carry out common object must exist—Deliberations for future individual action do not constitute an assembly unlawful.

To constitute an assembly an unlawful one it must be a part of the plan of the meeting that the common object should be forthwith carried into effect. If men meet only to arrange plans for future action it cannot be said that there was any fear of the breach of the peace without which there can be no unlawful assembly. There must be some present and immediate purpose of carrying into effect the common object. In order to establish the common intention of any unlawful assembly it is not necessary to prove that its members actually met and conspired to commit an offence, but such intention can be inferred from the circumstances of the case. —"Common intention" in S. 34 does not mean the same thing as "common object" in Ss. 146 and

The words "common intention" in S. 34 have not the same meaning as "common object" in Ss. 146 and 149. The object of an assembly as a whole may not be the same as the intention which several persons may have when in pursuance of that intention they perform a criminal act and it may well be that the object of the assembly was lawful whereas the intention common to those of the assembly who jointly committed a criminal act was in itself criminal and joint criminal act must be equally imputed to all of them. 52 Cal. 197 (P.C.), Rel. on. (Courtney Terrell,

In his first information complainant charged the accused who constituted an unlawful assembly with the common object of destroying a hut. That charge was not substantiated but it was proved that the complainant was beaten incidentally by the assembly. Beating the complainant was not the principal or the sole object of the assembly. Conviction under both Ss. 147 and 323 is not illegal.

S. 149 creates no substantive offence in itself. It is merely declaratory of the law and makes a person who has been a member of an unlawful assembly liable for the offences committed by any other member of it. But S. 147 is a substantive offence in itself and makes a person guilty of the offence of rioting as distinct from actually causing any injury or hurt. Similarly S. 323 is a distinct offence in itself; therefore there is nothing illegal in convicting a person of offences under both these sections. As soon as the first injury is caused to any person force is used and the offence of rioting is complete. Subsequent injuries though inflicted in pursuance of the same common object would be distinct in injuries justifying a conviction under S. 323; 17 Bom. 260 (F.B.) In a conviction for rioting it does not much matter who the aggressors are if the persons who are on the scene and who are attacked themselves riot and use deadly weapons. Bamboo sticks two inches thick—

Some of the persons carrying deadly weapons—Others having knowledge whether guilty.

S. 149, I. P. C., constitutes a separate offence of its own. Hence if persons who are not carrying deadly weapons themselves are rioting and are found to be guilty they can only be found guilty under S. 148 coupled with S. 149, I. P. C. If all the accused were not proved to have been armed with deadly weapons only those who have been proved to have been so armed can be convicted under S. 148 in the absence of a charge under S. 149. —S. 148—Furtherance of Common Object.

One member of unlawful assembly carrying deadly weapon—Other members are liable unless it is proved that the weapon was not carried in furtherance of common object.

A person who is a member of an unlawful assembly is guilty under S. 148 though he himself is not armed with a deadly weapon, when some other member of the assembly is so armed.

Where an act is committed by a person which is not an essential ingredient of the offence which is intended to be committed by a body of persons, no doubt the other persons composing the body would not be liable for the act of a single individual; he does it on his own account. But, where the carrying of a deadly weapon cannot but be in prosecution of the common object, it cannot be said that the other persons composing the unlawful assembly cannot be punished under S. 148 read with S. 149.

If a deadly weapon is carried without the knowledge of the other members of the assembly for the private ends of a particular individual, no doubt the other persons would not be guilty under S. 148. But where that fact is not made out, but it is shown that one or more of the members of the assembly carried a deadly weapon it cannot be said that the weapon was not carried in prosecution of the common object; and, therefore, all the members of the assembly are guilty under S. 148: 22 Cal. 276, Expl. —Defence cannot be nicely modulated—Retiring, because violence is expected, is not compulsory—Assembly can be guilty of exceeding right of private defence against criminal force.

Where, possession is undisputed or where there is no time to seek assistance of the authorities there is no obligation upon a person, entitled to exercise the right of private defence and to defend his person, or his property, to retire from the field merely because his assailant threatens him with violence. A man acting under an apprehension of death cannot be expected to judge too nicely the force of his own blow; and the common law of England, which is substantially also the law in India on this topic, says that he is not bound to modulate his defence step by step according to the attack before there is reason to believe that the attack is over; he is not obliged to retreat but may pursue his adversary till he finds himself out of danger and if in a conflict between them he happens to kill, such killing is justifiable. Obiter.

—The law is that if the members of an assembly act with the common object of exceeding the right of private defence, then they are not only all generally guilty of rioting but also of the particular offence constituted by such excess of user. An assault is a crime except under certain special circumstances. But in one sense criminal force is a continuing wrong and there is a limit where the plea of justification ceases to operate and the liability to punishment revives; if one member in prosecution of the common object of an assembly exceeds that limit every other member shares with him the guilt of his act. 13 C.W.N. 1180, Foll. 39 Cal. 896; 35 Cal. 368, Dist. —S. 149—Scope.

—S. 149 creates no substantive offence, but Ss. 147 and 323 do—So conviction under both Ss. 147 and 323 is not illegal.

S. 149 creates no substantive offence in itself. It is merely declaratory of the law and makes a person who has been a member of an unlawful assembly liable for the offences committed by any other member of it. But S. 147 is a substantive offence in itself and makes a person guilty of the offence of rioting as distinct from actually causing any injury or hurt. Similarly S. 323 is a distinct offence in itself; therefore there is nothing illegal in convicting a person of offences under both these sections. As soon as the first injury is caused to any, person force is used and the offence of rioting is complete. Subsequent injuries, though inflicted in pursuance of the same common object, would be distinct injuries justifying a conviction under S. 323; 17 Bom. 260 (F.B.), Appr. 6 All. 21, Dist.; 9 All. 645 and 14 A.L.J. 738, Foll. —It is true S. 149 is an offence in respect of which there has been participation. —S. 34 refers to cases in which several persons both do an act and intend to do that act: it does not refer to cases where several persons intend to do one act and some one or more of them do an entirely different act. —Section covers two classes of cases—One is act done for the common object and the other is act known by accused as likely to be caused in prosecuting their common object.

Per Daniels, J.—Section 149 covers two classes of acts. The two parts of the section are quite distinct though the same act may and frequently does fall under both. The first class of acts are those committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly. The act may be that of one individual accused, but if it is committed in furtherance of the end which they all have in view, all the accused are liable for it. The second class of acts are those which the accused knew to be likely to be committed in connection with the carrying out of their common purpose.

Per Boys, J.—Ordinarily if accused persons go armed with spears in superior force intending to carry out by force a purpose (in this case capturing a woman) which they know others will resist, each of the accused must be taken to have known at least, that a death caused by one of his party was likely to be caused. —S. 149—Security order.

—Order under S. 106, Cr. P. C. does not lie where accused is convicted under any section of I.P.C. read with S. 149.

The amendment to S. 106, by the Act XVIII of 1923 has made an order under S. 106 impossible where the only section under which the accused are convicted is a section of the Penal Code which is read with S. 149. The amendment is not very happily worded for it speaks of an offence punishable under S. 149. No offence is punishable under S. 149 alone; there must be some substantive offence charged to be read with S. 149.

—Hindu procession proceeding in particular authorised street—Mahomedan procession coming in opposite direction ignoring orders of police to go by another route—Accused are guilty under S. 153.

In ordinary circumstances undoubtedly a police constable has not the power to stop a person from proceeding along a particular street and order him to go by another. He can stop him for a certain time in order to regulate traffic so as to prevent the traffic getting mixed up and obstructing passage along the street. Where the accused Mahomedans formed themselves into a procession, and proceeded along a certain route at the time when another procession of Hindus was passing in the opposite direction along the same route as settled by authorities, ignoring the orders of policemen stationed there to control traffic that they should go by another route, and a riot with injury to many persons was the result:

Held: that the act of the accused in refusing to comply with the orders of the police was an offence under Penal Code, S. 153 the orders of the police being valid under Bombay District Police Act, S. 53. G deliberately threw bricks at a temple hoping that the Hindus would believe that the bricks came from the Mahomedan quarter and that thereby the Hindus would be enraged against the Mahomedans and there would be a riot between the Hindus and Mahomedans. Nobody was hurt by the act.

Held: G desired a certain result to follow from the throwing of bricks and he deliberately threw the bricks at the temple for that purpose. There was neither rashness nor negligence in the act. G was not guilty under S. 336.

Held: further that the throwing of a brick at a temple is not declared to be an offence, nor is it prohibited by law. G's act was not therefore illegal and he was not guilty under S. 153. —Explanation—Strong comment on a religion or its founder to induce persons to change religion may be permitted.

It is possible to conceive the writing of a reasoned, critical and strong attack on a religion or its founder, written by way of comment on that religion or on its founder with a view to induce persons to forsake that religion for another, which might fall within the explanation, for the reason that though there may be a tendency in the language employed to promote hatred or enmity, the language used did not of necessity convey that intention or where the writer has been able to prove by evidence that that was not his intention even in part; but a scurrilous and vituperative attack on a religion or on its founder would require a considerable amount of explanation to take it out of the substantive part of S. 153-A and bring it within the four corners of the explanation. Though any criticism of a religious leader, whether dead or alive, may not fall within the ambit of S. 153-A the writing of a scurrilous and foul attack on such a religious leader would prima facie fall under the said section. —S. 153-A—Essentials for conviction.

The fact that the article in a newspaper was not conducive to an improvement in the feelings of the two communities towards one another is no ground for conviction under S. 153-A because even if it was not, the prosecution has to establish that it was published with intent to incite Hindus against Muhammadans or to stir up feelings of hatred and enmity between the two communities. The act of recalling to the mind of the Hindus of a place, the painful experiences of people of their community in other places would naturally have the effect of embittering their feelings against the alleged oppressors, but those who suffer have the right to complain, and if the complaint is made in a sober language and is free from exaggerations and incisive comments, it can lawfully be published, for the consideration of public officers and others concerned with a view to their taking necessary action to prevent a repetition of what had previously taken place. son who publishes words that have a tendency to promote class hatred can be convicted under that section. The words "promotes or attempts to promote feelings, of enmity" are to be read as connoting a successful or unsuccessful attempt to promote feelings of enmity. It must be the purpose or part of the purpose of the accused to promote such feelings and, if it is no part of his purpose, the mere circumstance that there may be a tendency is not sufficient. The intention is to be collected, in most cases, from the internal evidence of the words themselves, but there is no authority for saying that other evidence cannot be looked at. The explanation shows quite conclusively that in any matter on which other evidence could assist, it may be taken. It is permissible to examine the general policy of the paper and also take into consideration the persons for whom it was written and the state of feeling between the two communities at the time of publication: A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 1133, Appr. and Foll.

The fact that the writer had previously published matter which necessitated warnings from Government on three separate occasions would justify the award of substantial punishment. (Broadway and Skemp, JJ.) DEVI SHARAN SHARMA v. EMPEROR.

—S. 153-A—Intention.

Although the internal evidence of the words published will generally be decisive on the question of intention they are never more than evidence of intention and it is the real intention of the accused that is the test. Ill-feeling may or may be likely to result from published matter is not in itself sufficient: A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 1133, Foll. (Rankin, C. J. and C. C. Ghose, J.) SATYA RANJAN v. EMPEROR.

The intention of the writer of a book must be judged primarily by the language of the book itself though it is permissible to receive and consider external evidence either to prove or to rebut the meaning ascribed to it in the order of forfeiture under S. 99-A, Criminal P. C. If the language is of a nature calculated to produce or to promote feelings of enmity or hatred the writer must be presumed to intend that which his act was likely to produce. This intention should also be judged from the nature of the language he has used and from the circumstances in which the —Intention is essential—Truth of statements charged is material to determine intention and for sentence.

Intention is an element in the offence under S. 153-A and the Court must be satisfied that the accused had a conscious intention of promoting, causing or exciting enmity and hatred; 10 P. R., (Cr.) 1907, Foll. The question of the truth of the statements made by the accused is material so far as the accused's intention is concerned. Moreover evidence given to show that the statements made by the accused were true, or believed by him to be true, even if insufficient for the purpose of proving him to be innocent of intending to promote class hatred, would be relevant on the question of the sentence to be passed in the event of his conviction. (Martineau, J.) KING-EMPEROR v. RAJ PAL, 93 I.C. 1052=7 Lah. 15=27 Cr. L.J. 556=27 P.L.R. 207=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 195.

—Evidence of Intention to promote feelings of enmity is necessary—External evidence is not excluded on the question of intention—Words used are merely evidence of intention but real intention is the test.

Section 153-A does not mean that any person who publishes words that have a tendency to promote class hatred can be convicted under that section. The words "promotes or attempts to promote feelings of enmity" are to be read as connoting a successful or unsuccessful attempt to promote feelings of enmity. It must be the purpose or part of the purpose of the accused to promote such feelings and, if it is no part of his purpose, the mere circumstance that there may be a tendency is not sufficient. It is quite true that whether or not the promoting of enmity is the intention is to be collected in most cases from the internal evidence of the words themselves, but there is no authority for saying that other evidence cannot be looked at; and the explanation shows quite conclusively that in any matter on which other evidence could assist it may be taken. But although other evidence is not excluded, it is true that from the nature of the case, the internal evidence of the words used and the meaning of the words used will very generally be decisive of the question whether or not the Court is confronted with a successful or unsuccessful attempt to promote feelings of enmity. They will be decisive in all cases where the intention is expressly declared; also if the words used naturally, clearly and indubitably have such a tendency, then it must be presumed that the publisher intended that which is the natural —Receiving bribe even for doing a just and proper act is an offence—People of locality accustomed to pay bribes—Independent proof of offence is necessary.

—S. 161—Proof of Offence.

The fact that the people of a particular tract of the country have been given to the practice of making payments in money or in kind to subordinate officials to win their favour, does not relieve the prosecution of the necessity of strict and conclusive proof of the offence of bribery.

When a bribe has been proved to have been given it is not necessary to ask what, if any, effect the bribe had on the mind of the receiver and it is an offence even when the act, done for the bribe given, is a just and proper one. The gist of the offence is a public servant taking gratification other than legal remuneration in respect of an official act. (Prideaux, A.J.C.) ANANT WASUDEO v. —Punishment must be deterrent—Mere fine is not enough.

Punishments in the case of offences by or relating to the public servants, and particularly those of obtaining or giving bribes by or to public servants, ought to be deterrent as their object is to check repetition of the offences not only by the actual culprits, but also by the other public servants. A lenient punishment as of a mere fine can hardly act as a corrective, or deter men from committing similar offences. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.) EMPEROR v. MAHADEO GANESH. 86 I.C. 469=26 Cr. —A prosecution under S. 182, I. P. C., will lie quite irrespective of whether the action which a public servant is asked to take on information given to him is a legal one or not. —S. 182—Comparative Scope.

Sections 182 and 211, Penal Code in reality differ fundamentally as regards the ingredients of the offence concerned.

Section 182 is primarily intended for cases of false information which do not ordinarily involve a particular allegation or charge against a specified and definite person. S. 211 covers cases where there is a definite information or charge with reference to a criminal offence against a particular person. (Findlay, J. C.) BHOLU v. PUNAJI. 105 I.C. 434=

9 A.I. Cr. R. 87=A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 17.

—S. 182—Essentials.

To constitute the offence punishable under S. 182, I.P.C. it is necessary that the information given should be that which the accused person knows or believes to be false. It is not sufficient that he had reason to believe it to be false, or that he did not believe it to be true, there must have been positive knowledge or belief that it was false: 32 P. R. 1884 Cr. and 29 P. R. 1894 Cr., Foll. (Tekchand, J.) SARDAR KHAN v. EMPEROR. 119 I.C. 230=30 P.L.R. 685=30 Cr. L.J. 1008=
1930 Cr. C. 22=11 L.L.J. 495=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 84.

—It is an essential ingredient of an offence under S. 182 that the offender should intend to cause, or should know it to be likely that the information given by him to the public servant will cause the public servant to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given or known by him, or to use the lawful power of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person. A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 717, Ref. (Courtney-Terrill, C. J., and Dhaole, J.) BANTI PANDE v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 550.

—Under S. 182, accused must have known or believed information to be false while under S. 211

if he had reasons to believe it to be false it is enough.

Under S. 211 of the Penal Code if the accused makes his complaint without any just grounds and acts without due care or caution it is enough to constitute an offence. But under S. 182 the information given to a public servant should not only be false in fact but it must be false to the knowledge or belief of the informant and the mere fact that the accused had reasons to believe it to be false is not sufficient. (Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.) X v. EMPEROR. 82 I.C. 718=19 S.L.R. 91=25 Cr. L.J. 1358=
A.I.R. 1925 Sind 184.

—S. 182—Evidence and Proof.

The fact that an information is shown to be false does not cast upon the party who is charged with an offence under S. 182 the burden of showing that when he made it, he believed it to be true. The prosecution must make out that the only reasonable inference was that he must have known or believed it to be false. It is necessary for the prosecution to prove, not merely the absence of reasonable or probable cause for giving the information, but a positive knowledge or belief of the falsity of the information given: 26 Mad. 640; 31 Bom. 204; and 35 P. R. 1890 Cr.; Foll. (Tek Chand and Agha Haidar, JJ.) EMPEROR v. KARTARSINGH. 110 I.C. 785=

—S. 182—False Report.

—Police prosecuting for different offence—Persons giving false report whether liable to be convicted.

A made a false report of dacoity. The police did not proceed on his complaint but prosecuted certain persons under S. 324. This offence was also not brought home to them and the police made a complaint against A requesting his prosecution under S. 182 for making a false report of dacoity. A was convicted. Held that the conviction was legal. The complaint was properly made under S. 182. The only persons who could take action in the case were the police and not the Court which not having tried any case of dacoity was not in a position of being able to say a false complaint had been made of dacoity before it. —S. 182—"Gives information."

There is nothing to justify the reading in of the word "voluntarily" before the word "gives" in S. 182.

Where a driver of a motor-car driving without a license, when asked for his name by the Superintendent of Police gave a wrong name,

Held: that the Superintendent of Police was not holding an investigation and the question put to the driver was not put under S. 161, Cr. P. Code, so as to give him benefit of S. 162. He is guilty under S. 182, I.P.C., because the words "gives information" in that section should not be interpreted as necessarily meaning "volunteers information": 35 P.W.R. Cr. 1914, Dist. 10 Bom. 124 and A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 56, Rel. on. (Allanson, J.) EMPEROR v. LACHMAN SINGH. 113 I.C. 587=7 Pat. 718=10 P.L.T. 244=

—The words "give information" should not be interpreted as necessarily meaning "voluntary information," i.e., that it must be information on some matter which is not already under inquiry by the public servant.

—S. 182—Graver and minor offences.

There is no bar to cognizance being taken of an offence under Penal Code, S. 211 on the complaint of the investigating police officer though he is not also an officer referred to under S. 195 (1) (a), Cr. P. Code; but if the charge under Penal Code, S. 211 fails, there cannot by reason of Cr. P. Code, S. 195 (1) (a) be a conviction under Penal Code, S. 182. (Macpherson, J.) KANTIR MISSIR v. —S. 182—Inability to prove.

—Inability to substantiate claim is no offence.

A person who makes a false statement in his petition cannot be held to have committed an offence under S. 182 simply because his claim is not substantiated, even assuming that some false statement, which was not directly the subject of complaint, was made with the object of inducing and that he did induce the Court to take some action, as it cannot be said that the Court was thereby induced to do what it ought not to have done. (Jwala Prasad, J.) AMIR ALI v. DUKHAN MOMIN. 109 I.C. 805=10 A. I. Cr. R. 320=29 Cr. L.J. 613=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 574.

—S. 182—Intention.

A driver of a motor car was driving without license. The Superintendent of Police asked for his name and he gave a false and fictitious name. The effect of the false information was that difficulties and obstacles were put in the way of his prosecution.

Held; that although the effect of the wrong information was merely to obstruct the prosecution of the real offender, yet it is the intention in the mind of the informant, that is important. In giving the false name the driver's intention was to cause the police officer to take steps for the prosecution of a person, who did not exist and to omit to take steps against himself. The false information given by him, therefore, came within the mischief of S. 182 (a); 13 All. 351 and 13 Bom. 506, Rel. on. (Allanson, J.) EMPEROR v. —S. 182—Power to prosecute.

The petitioner filed a complaint before the Magistrate who after examining the petitioner sent the complaint to the Sub-Inspector for inquiry and report. The Sub-Inspector reported the case to be maliciously false, recommended the prosecution of the petitioner under S. 211, Penal Code, and preferred a complaint of that offence against the petitioner. The petitioner filed a petition impugning the report and praying the Magistrate to make a judicial inquiry. The Magistrate directed the Sub-Inspector to submit a report for prosecution under S. 182 and on receipt of the "report for prosecution" issued summons on the petitioner under S. 182.

Held: that the order was wrong in law, that S. 195 (i) (a), Cr. P. Code, bars a complaint by the Sub-Inspector of an offence under S. 182 since he was not "the public servant concerned" or the superior of such public servant to whom the false information punishable under S. 182 was given and that S. 195 (i) (b) was a bar to cognizance being taken of it except on the complaint of the Magistrate. In the case of removing an encroachment, a public servant has ordinarily only to see that the encroachment is removed. He is not, either by law or practice, required to do the whole act of removing the encroachment by his own hands. He can employ agents for such a manual task and if the agent is obstructed in doing what he is legitimately required to do by the public servant actually present at the time of the removal, then there is an obstruction offered to the public servant himself, because what

—S. 188—Disobedience long after order.

Orders passed under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, being intended to provide for cases where a speedy remedy was desirable, do not have more than a temporary operation. Where an order had been passed on 7th February 1873 presumably under the said section prohibiting religious processions with music in any but certain specified thoroughfares in Bareilly City, a person could not now be convicted under S. 188 of the Penal Code for disobedience of that order long after. 5 Cal. 7 (F.B.), 10 All. 115; 2 Mad. 140, Ref. —S. 188—Essentials.

In order to constitute offence under S. 188 it is not sufficient merely to find that a person was a member of a crowd which disobeyed a lawful order but it must further be found that the disobedience of the crowd of which that person was a member, tended to cause danger to human life, health or safety, or caused or tended to cause a riot or an affray: 32 Cal. 793; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 591, Rel. on. —It is not sufficient in order to affect a person with the knowledge of an order under S. 144 and to render him liable to conviction under S. 188 to show that the order had been duly promulgated. —Promulgation of order is not sufficient—Accused must be proved to have knowledge of the order.

Section 188 requires that it should not merely be proved that there was an order which was duly promulgated under S. 134, Cr. P. Code, but also that the accused person who is going to be convicted under the section was aware of it. The promulgation of the order is not sufficient to establish this knowledge: 22 Cr. #### —S. 188—"Promulgate."

—Meeting convened against order of Police Commissioner—Order held duly promulgated under S. 188.

On 15th July 1920, the Commissioner of Police issued an order, styling it a "notification" under S. 23 (3) prohibiting the President, the Secretary, the members of the managing Committee and the members of the Girni Kamgar Union from holding, convening, or calling together any assembly of mill hands or employers of the textile mills of Bombay for one week from the date of the order. The notification was duly promulgated in the mill area. On 13th July 1929, a circular was issued purporting to be signed by six persons including the accused inviting the strikers to attend the meeting. The meeting was held in the evening and in consequence the accused were placed before a Magistrate who convicted them under I.P.C. S. 143.

Held: that in issuing the order under S. 23 (3) the Commissioner of Police properly exercised his discretion for the preservation of the public peace and safety and that it was lawfully promulgated within the meaning of Penal Code, S. 188.

Held further: that the order in writing was not vitiated by the misdescription as a notification: Sharp v. Wakefield, (1891) A. C. 17; A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 1, Ref. (Patkar and Wild, J.J.) BHALCHANDRA TRIMBAK RANADIVE v. EMPEROR.

—False dying declaration by man, who does nothing to communicate with authorities does not come under either S. 192 or S. 194.

While a false dying declaration may well, in certain circumstances, go in as evidence, the intent that it may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding and cause an erroneous opinion to be entertained touching a point material to the result of such a proceeding, which is an essential ingredient in the definition, cannot easily be inferred of a man who was thought to be dying at the time and did nothing by himself or by his friends to communicate with or seek any redress from the authorities. The intent of knowledge necessary under S. 194 presents an even greater difficulty in the application of that section, for it postulates a feeling in the mind of the petitioner that his recovery was impossible. As a written complaint is not verified nor is it required by law to be verified it cannot by itself be used as a basis for prosecution for perjury. But the examination of the complainant under S. 200 being taken on oath and signed by the complainant can be so used though it does not bear any certificate by the Magistrate that the same was read over to the complainant. The evident object of getting this substance of the examination of the complaint signed by him or her is to make use of it, in case of need: as against the complainant's subsequent deposition as a witness for starting against him, if need be, a prosecution for perjury on the ground that the two statements contradict each other. 6 C.W.N. 840, Rel. on. —Perjury trial—Opinion of handwriting expert and judge's opinion—Conviction bad.

Where in a trial for perjury in respect of a promissory note which the accused said on oath was in his handwriting, the Magistrate admitted in evidence the opinion of a handwriting expert against the accused without his being examined on oath and also had his own opinion after comparing the handwriting of the promissory note with various other handwritings, that the writing was not of the accused.

Held that a conviction under S. 193 based on these materials is bad. The proposition that a Judge should not import his personal knowledge into his judgments and that if he wishes to rely on facts within his knowledge, he must go to the witness box and depose to them on oath is no doubt correct in the main, but it does not apply to facts of which a Judge is permitted to take judicial notice and nowhere in the Indian Evidence Act is it laid down that a Judge must not look at exhibits produced in Court or partly base his judgment on them. 11 W.R. Cr. 25, Foll.

No man can be convicted of giving false evidence except on proof of facts which, if accepted as true, shew not merely that it is incredible, but that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be true. If the inference from the facts proved falls, short of this, there is nothing on which a conviction can stand; because assuming all that is proved to be true, it is still possible that no crime was committed. While a false dying declaration may well, in certain circumstances, go in as evidence, the intent that it may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding and cause an erroneous opinion to be entertained touching a point material to the result of such a proceeding, which is an essential ingredient in the definition, cannot easily be inferred of a man who was thought to be dying at the time and did nothing by himself or by his friends to communicate with or seek any redress from the authorities. The essence of S. 201 is that the accused caused the evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment.

P murdered H and ordered B to help him, carrying the corpse to a ditch and burying the wearing apparel.

Held: that the offence under S. 201 was not proved against B. B in helping to carry the corpse to the ditch was acting under orders of P and she appeared to have been bullied into doing the act. B's acts were not voluntary nor done with the intention of screening the offence from punishment. (Young and Sen, JJ.) MT. BAKHTAWARI v. EMPEROR. 120 I.C. 268 = 31 Cr. L.J. 37 = 1930 Cr. C. 61 = A.I.R. 1930 All. 45.

—Intention to screen necessary—Mere knowledge not sufficient—Presumption as to intent.

Under S. 201 mere knowledge on the part of the accused that his act is likely to screen the principal offender is not sufficient, but actual intention must be established. Whether the requisite intention is proved or not is a question to be decided on the facts of each case. Ordinarily where the Crown has satisfactorily proved that (a) an offence has been committed for which some person is criminally responsible and (b) that the accused caused the disappearance of the evidence of the commission of the offence or gave false information concerning it, as the case may be, a presumption arises in favour of the Crown that the accused did act with the requisite intent. That presumption may, however, be rebutted by circumstances or by direct evidence. Where it is so rebutted the accused is entitled to be acquitted except where he is charged with giving false information, in which case he may still be convicted under S. 203. —S. 201—"Offence".

—Not the offence committed—Offence the accused knew had been committed.

Under S. 201, I.P.C., it is necessary for the Court to decide not so much what the offence, the evidence of which had been concealed, had been committed, as what offence the accused knew or had reason to believe had been committed. The Court must treat him to be a stranger to the crime, who had merely witnessed it. (Wallace and Jackson, JJ.) CHINNA GANGAPPA v. EMPEROR 1930 M.W.N. 489.

—Not the person charged.

It is settled law that a principal cannot be convicted as an accessory and it may well be presumed that in enacting this section the legislature never intended to depart from that rule, if it be so, the offender in S. 201 must needs refer to a person other than the person charged. —Itself an offence—Destruction of all evidence—Not necessary.

Removal of dead body from the house to a distant place does amount to causing an evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear. S. 201 cannot be confined to the destruction of the evidence of the murder itself. —Causing evidence about the locality to disappear—Intention to screen—A question of fact.

The ordinary inference to be drawn from the conduct of persons who have been concerned in a murder in a house, and who have removed the body to another place, is that they do so with the intention of causing, at any rate, the true evidence about the locality, in which the murder took place, to disappear. Whether such evidence was caused to disappear, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment is a question to be decided from the circumstances of the case: 47 All. 306, Rel. on.

Three men were sleeping close to the deceased man. Some one came in the night and struck the man with a violent blow severing the neck from body. Subsequently these persons removed the corpse to another room, broke bars of the windows and obliterated blood marks in original place, thereby causing evidence of locality of murder to disappear and putting police on wrong scent as to murderer.

Held: that the fact that none of them was disturbed was improbable and it must be held that those persons must have had an intention of screening the murderer or murderers. (Stuart, C.J., and Raza, J.) MATA DIN v. EMPEROR.

Eventually a house was sold in satisfaction of the decree and the full amount was realized by H. U the applicant subsequently discovered that H had recovered more than what was really due on the basis of the decree and applied to the execution Court for sanctioning prosecution of H under S. 210, Penal Code.

Held: for sustaining a charge under S. 210 it must be established that the person charged acted 'fraudulently.' Although H omitted to state the amount realized in his application for execution, it was very doubtful, if he acted fraudulently. The judgment-debtors did not raise any objection as to the excess claimed by the decree-holder for nearly two years although they raised various other objections in the meantime. —Complaint without just cause—Action without due care or caution—Sufficient ground—S. 182 distinguished.

Under S. 211 of the Penal Code if the accused makes his complaint without any just grounds and acts without due care or caution it is enough to constitute an offence. But under S. 182 the information given to a public servant should not only be false in fact but it must be false to the knowledge or belief of the informant and the mere fact that the accused had reasons to believe it to be false is not sufficient. P went to the police station and made allegations against one B and A to the effect that they had jointly committed robbery on him, in the course of which, one of them caused hurt to him. The police investigated the case, found it to be false and finally classified it as such; thereupon, P lodged a complaint in Court against B and A on the same facts and for the same offence. The Magistrate on receipt of it directed the police for enquiry and report. On receipt of the police report, the Magistrate dismissed the complaint, classifying the case as "false." Then the officer-in-charge of the police station filed a complaint against P under S. 182, Penal Code.

Held: that though the offence alleged against the petitioner fell under both S. 182 and S. 211, prosecution under S. 182 was quite improper. The petitioner made a statement to the Village Munsif that a dacoity was committed in his house and mentioned certain persons as having taken part in the dacoity. The Village Munsif forwarded the complaint to the Police, who held an investigation and referred the case as false. The Sub-Magistrate to whom the papers were sent, accepted the referred charge-sheet and struck the case off his file. The police put in a charge-sheet before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate against the petitioner for an offence under S. 211, I. P. C. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferred the case to the Second Class Magistrate who had acted on the referred charge-sheet in the alleged dacoity case.

Held: that this was not a case in which the police could start proceedings of their own accord. The offence under S. 211 is a non-cognizable one and the Police were not empowered to investigate into a non-cognizable offence and charge the petitioner. It was open either to the accused in the alleged dacoity case or to the Village Munsif, or any Police Officer to prefer complaint under S. 190, Cr. P. No proof of accused having Knowledge or reasonable belief—Conviction bad—“Know” “has reason to believe” and “offender” explained.

A person can be supposed to “know” where there is a direct appeal to his senses. Person “has reason to believe” under S. 26 if he has sufficient cause to believe the thing but not otherwise. The word “offender” used under S. 212 means a person who has contravened the provisions of any criminal law, which is punishable either with death, transportation, imprisonment or fine. Where there is neither affirmative nor any circumstantial evidence to bring home to the door of the accused that he knew or had reason to believe that the person he was harbouring was an offender within the meaning of S. 212, his conviction under S. 212 cannot be sustained. If such is proved and there is further the acceptance of or attempt to obtain or agreement to accept the gratification or restitution as a consideration for the same, the offence is complete. Punishment of trafficking in crime does not apply to the thief—Failure to trace, not knowing the offender—No offence.

The primary aim of the section is to punish all trafficking in crime, by which a person knowing that property has been obtained by crime, and knowing the criminal, makes a profit out of the crime, while screening the offender from justice. The section is not intended to apply to the actual thief, but to some one who, being in league with the thief, receives some gratification on account of helping the owner to recover stolen property, without at the same time using all the means in his power to cause the thief to be apprehended and convicted of his offence.

General comment on these various matters or historical events, so long as they do not directly refer to the part played by the accused, cannot be seriously objected to. Such criticism would not be a comment on pending proceedings at all nor would the publications of such comments ordinarily tend to interfere with the course of justice. good, no Court could or would treat that as contempt of Court, but it is a very grave and serious contempt to accuse a Judge of High Court of having decided a case not according to the dictates of justice but in order to please and curry favour with others and to say that the door of justice (clearly including the door of High Court) has been closed against a particular community. Any act done or writing published, calculated to bring a Court or a Judge of the Court into contempt, or to lower its authority is a contempt of Court. The rules in the Resource Manual themselves require that a person who wants to have the defaced coins exchanged must at his own cost remove the solder and then tender the coins. —Certainty of distribution of profits—Drawing by lots—Not a lottery.

The plaintiff and the defendant promoted a 'Chit Fund.' A capital fund of Rs. 500 a month was raised by 500 subscribers, subscribing, each one rupee per mensem. At the end of the month, there was a drawing by lot and the subscriber, who drew the ticket was paid Rs. 50 and his connection with the transaction forthwith ceased. This process was repeated month after month, till the end of the 49th month. At the close of the 50th month, each of the remaining subscribers was paid Rs. 50 and the stakeholders divided the profit and the fund was dissolved.

Held that the chit fund was not a lottery.

Per Venkatashubba Rao, J.—In this case, while chance determines the disposal of the interest earned, there is absolute certainty, with reference to the distribution of the capital fund itself. Though it may be said it is a small element of chance that tempts some to join the fund, the dominant feature of the transaction is that it enables a large number to gradually lay by money and receive their savings in a lump sum and the scheme is in their case an incentive to thrift.

The word 'lottery' is not defined either in the

PENAL CODE (1860), S. 294-A—Goods.

Indian Penal Code, or Act 5 of 1844, nor in the English Statutes. When the scheme has for its object the carrying on of a legitimate business, the fact that it provides for the distribution of its profits in certain events by lots will not vitiate the scheme. All chit-funds, the main object of which is the promotion of co-operation, prudence and thrift ought to be regarded as legitimate, even though there is an element of chance. If by the time a society of this kind became known to the public, all its members were ascertained and there is no invitation to any member of the public to join it, it cannot be said that any person keeps a lottery office, at which the public were invited to join and to pay, within the meaning of the English Acts or S. 294-A of the Indian Penal Code. That is it is not that every lottery constitutes an offence but the keeping of a lottery office, which is a standing invitation to the public, that constitutes the offence.

He also published a pamphlet in which these facts were set out. He was accused under S. 294-A of publishing a proposal relating to a lottery.

Held: that the word "drawing" is used in S. 294-A in its physical sense and that the actual drawing of lots is an essential ingredient of the offence under S. 294-A. Although the transaction in question amounted to a lottery, [Barret v. Burden, (1893) 63 L.J.M.C. 33; Hunt v. Williams, (1888) 52 J.P. 821; *Taylor v. —Ss. 299 & 300—Culpable Homicide or Murder—Essential requisites of.

—Intention to cause injury likely to cause death—Knowledge that such injury was likely to cause death—Both necessary.

Where there was a struggle between two girls for the possession of some gram, and one of them hit the other with a stick, whereupon the uncle of the latter came running with a lathi in his hand, struck the other girl on her head, and after she had fallen down, also struck her on the thigh,

Held: that the accused can be convicted only of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and not of murder.

Per Kulwant Sahay, J.—The essence of the crime of murder under Cl. (2), S. 300, I.P.C., is that there must be the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows is likely to cause death, and in order to convict a person of the offence of murder under Cl. (2) of the section, it has to be found that he had the intention of causing the injury, and also that he had the knowledge that such injury which he intended to inflict was likely to cause death.

A blow on the head with a lathi is certainly likely to cause death and the person who inflicts lathi blow on the head of another person must be presumed to have the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. But it does not necessarily follow that a lathi blow on the head is always sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

If a person causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, his offence comes under S. 299, and it is only, if the intention was to cause bodily injury, which injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, that the offence would come under S. 300, Cl. (3).

The difference between culpable homicide and murder is merely a question of different degrees of probability that death would ensue. (Ross and

Where the deceased was given an unmerciful beating, but although the injuries inflicted upon him were so numerous, no bones were broken and not a single one of the injuries individually amounted to more than simple hurt,

Held: that if it had been the accused's intention to kill him or to cause him such injury as they knew to be likely to cause his death or such as was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause his death, they would have inflicted wounds of much more serious nature. Therefore, the offence committed by them is not murder, but culpable homicide not amounting to murder as they must be deemed to have known that by giving the accused such a beating as they did they were likely to cause his death. A person was accused of having murdered his daughter. There was evidence to show that one day he went out along with the daughter and returned alone. The accused had made a statement before the 'Juge d' instruction that his daughter was tired of life and that he assisted her to commit suicide. The accused could lead the police to the place on the river where his daughter was drowned. Although the deceased's hands were tied, there were no signs to show any struggle between her and her father. All other adverse evidence was of interested nature. During the investigation by the 'Juge d' instruction another motive also was disclosed that the daughter, who was a widow, was intriguing with a man which possibly might have been the real motive that led her to death.

Bomb throwing—Knowledge of causing death or in jury likely to cause death presumed—No intention to kill any body in particular—No excuse.

From the definition of murder in Cl. (4), S. 300 it follows that if a person does an act of the nature described in the clause, he is guilty of an attempt to murder.

Any person of average intelligence knows that the explosion of a bomb in a crowded room, however carefully it may be thrown, is an imminently dangerous act such as he must be deemed to know would in all probability cause death or at least such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. Accused, described by their counsel as persons of exceptional intelligence must, therefore, be presumed to know that their act was dangerous and likely to cause death. The fact that accused had no deliberate intention of killing any particular individual does not take their case outside Cl. (4), S. 300, when they had no excuse for running the risk. It is no excuse to say that they were sincerely and passionately actuated by the desire to alter the present order of things. The defence of an anarchist is no defence to the charge. Held: that neither 300 (3) nor (4) applied to the case, and the accused was not guilty of murder: he was not also guilty under S. 304. —Hitting with hockey stick in return for injuries received the previous day—Death by internal bleeding and clotting of blood on the surface of the brain—Guilty of grievous hurt only.

The accused and the deceased were both young men of about 18 years. The deceased and a friend of his gave a beating to the accused. The next day the accused unexpectedly met the deceased, and forthwith formed the design of hitting him in return for the beating which he had received. Then he struck him a violent blow on the back of his head with a hockey stick which he was carrying and ran away. The deceased walked on for about 30 paces and sat down. He was taken home where, half an hour later, he was unconscious. The blow caused internal bleeding and a clot of blood on the surface of the brain. This caused death.

Held: that the accused was not guilty of murder, but of an offence under S. 325 as it could not be said under the circumstances of the case that the accused knew that the blow was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or that the bodily injury which he intended to cause was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. It was doubtful whether he even knew that the owner's wife was carrying the child. The affray took place at half past seven in the evening on the threshold of the doorhi which was a roofed building. Held: that as the accused was within the threshold of his own house when he inflicted the fatal injury, though his act was not completely covered by the provisions of the law relating to the right of private defence, Exception 2 to S. 300 sufficiently covered the case to warrant the altering of the conviction to one under S. 304, I.P.C. from under S. 302, I.P.C. But if he exceeds the right of self defence where there is no reasonable apprehension of his being killed but only had reasonable apprehension of grievous hurt and in defending himself exceeds his right of private defence and kills the other, he is guilty of an offence less than murder. pation was accused of murdering his wife in a quarrel by means of an axe. He pleaded grave and sudden provocation and in support of the plea produced a witness who had heard the deceased calling the accused "a pig, son of pig."

Held: that such abuse could not constitute grave provocation specially in the case of a low caste man of the class of the accused, accustomed to the use of abusive language. But the accused could be said to have acted without premeditation under some provocation which though not grave was sudden and deserved lesser sentence than sentence of death. —Girl married to accused taken away on the day of ceremony—Accused abused—Hurt with pen-knife—1st exception applies.

The accused thereupon attacked both the girl and the deceased with pen-knife and inflicted one injury on each in the abdomen. The girl however survived. Held, that the accused acted without premeditation, used only a pen-knife and gave each woman only one injury and therefore there is a very strong presumption that he neither intended to cause death nor such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to cause death and that the provocation given to him by the deceased was sufficiently grave and sudden to bring him within the first exception in Section 300. Held, further that when the accused wounded the woman in the abdomen with pen-knife he certainly intended to cause them grievous hurt. He then lost control of himself and took out a knife and stabbed her with several injuries which resulted in her death.

Before a person can claim the benefit of Exception (1) to Section 300 of the Penal Code, he must prove (i) that he was deprived of the power of self-control, and (ii) that the provocation was so grave and sudden as to reasonably justify such loss of self-control. *agony loses self-control and deals fatal blow—
Guilty under S. 304, para. 2 only.*

A woman was leading a notoriously immoral life which was the common scandal of the village. She had a young lover who was known to the accused, her husband. On the night previous to the murder she had a mysterious and significant disappearance from the bed side of her husband and subsequent protest by the husband resulted only in vulgar abuse by her. The husband started beating her with a shoe, lost his control, picked up a rough stick which happened to be lying close by and struck the fatal blow to the erring wife which resulted in her death. After murder police had no difficulty in finding him out and producing him before the Court.

Held : that the whole unfortunate affair should be looked at as one prolonged agony on the part of the husband which must have been preying upon his mind and eventually led to the fatal assault, bringing the case within the purview of Excep. 1, S. 300 : 2 Mad. 122 and 30 P.R. 1902 Cr., Ref. —Ss. 299 & 300—Sentence—Absence of dead body.

—Not finding the body immaterial—But death sentence not to be confirmed unless absolutely sure—In case of doubt, acquittal the proper course.

If one is satisfied that murder was committed the appropriate punishment should follow. The discovery of the body is not a material circumstance. It is the murder which is the thing to be regarded, that is to say, the killing of a human being by one or more human beings without just cause or excuse. It is not the finding of the body. The absence of the body is a circumstance which makes it necessary to proceed with the greatest care and caution, and one must never confirm a sentence of death, unless one feels completely satisfied about it. If there is such an element of doubt to render a Judge in the least degree uneasy, the proper course is not to change the nature of sentence from death to transportation for life, but to acquit the man altogether.

Per Mukerji, J.—Where the dead body does not appear and the factum of death is established by nothing but a retracted confession, there is a suitable case where a sentence of transportation may be awarded instead of the heavier sentence. —Requisites of Excep. 4 satisfied—Other facts prove murder—Death sentence not called for.

Where the fatal attack was not a premeditated one and the victims were injured in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and the offenders did neither take undue advantage nor acted in a cruel or unusual manner, but from the other facts of the case the case would not come under Excep. 4 to S. 300.

—Pre-meditation absent—Accused of a peaceful trading class.

—Splitting skull of an unarmed man with hatchet—No apprehension of injury to accused—Excep. 4 does not apply.

Although culpable homicide is committed without premeditation and in a sudden fight, and also in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel, when a man uses a hatchet on another unarmed man and strikes him a blow on the head with that hatchet splitting his skull while he was under no reasonable apprehension of injury to himself, he cannot claim the protection of Exception 4. —Only one out of four injuries serious—Accused received twelve injuries, some serious—Offence committed without premeditation—Excep. 4, applies.

Where the accused was found to have caused four injuries to the deceased with a clasp knife and the only serious injury was one in the abdomen of the deceased and the accused to save himself received presumably at the hand of the deceased no less than twelve injuries including a contused wound on the front of his head and a fracture of metacarpal bone of the index finger of the right hand.

—Ss. 299 & 300—Sufficient or likely to cause death.

—Depends on weapon, part of the body struck and violence of the blow—Intention to cause death—Immaterial.

Where the weapon used, the part of the body aimed at and pierced and the violence with which the blow was inflicted lead to the inference that the accused intended to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death even though the accused did not intend to cause death, the accused can be rightly convicted of murder.

But the fact that the assault followed sudden quarrel without premeditation is an extenuating circumstance as also the fact that accused belongs to a peaceful trading class and extreme penalty of law should not be inflicted and sentence should be reduced to transportation for life. of her son and so come under his influence. The boy died within three or four hours after drinking sharbat. The assessors were of opinion that there was no intention to cause death.

Held : (1) That the fact that the accused had no intention to cause death does not take the case out of the purview of S. 300. The act by which the death was caused was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the case satisfied the requirements of S. 300 so as to sustain conviction under S. 302. (2) That the explanation was reasonable and so case did not call for extreme penalty. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Tapp, J.) RANA v. of injury caused by him would be such as would be likely to cause death, the judge is not warranted in differing from them as to the intention or knowledge of the accused, based upon the reasoning of post hoc ergo propter hoc. —Sufficiently certain of guilt—Not sufficiently certain of sentence.

It is not permissible for Judge to sentence a prisoner to transportation for life on the ground that he is sufficiently certain of the guilt for that purpose but not sufficiently certain to sentence him to death: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 515, Rel. on. —Murder case—Prosecution evidence not disbelieved—Commitment to sessions.

A Magistrate not disbelieving the evidence for the prosecution, which tends to show that an offence under S. 302, Penal Code, has been committed, should better commit the accused to the Sessions, and leave the Sessions Judge to decide upon the value of the evidence led. —Trial for murder—Every procedure must be strictly followed.

It is imperative in cases where accused is being tried for his life that the provisions of the law should be strictly adhered to and that the accused should not have any manner of grievance with regard to the procedure adopted at the trial. —Finding of murder—Inadequate sentence—Reference to High Court.

If a Judge accepts a finding of murder there are only two penalties. He has no right to pass inadequate sentence. If he does not believe the verdict to be right it is his duty to refer the case to the High Court. (C. C. Ghose and Duval, JJ.) ARAJALI v. EMPEROR. 98 I.C. 102=30 C.W.N. 376= 27 Cr. L.J. 1254.

—Murder—Accused the culprit—Gravity of the offence—Sentence.

In order to convict an accused for murder the Court must be satisfied first that the murder had been committed; then it must be satisfied that the accused has committed the murder. At the third stage the question of sentence should be determined upon the gravity of the offence quite irrespective of the circumstances whether the body has or has not been discovered: A.I.R. 1925 All. 627 (F. —S. 302—Evidence—Circumstantial.

—Complete and incompatible with innocence—Admitting of no reasonable explanation—Death sentence.

There is no rule of law or practice to prevent a Court from sentencing an accused person to death merely on circumstantial evidence.

The accused person visited the village in which the murdered person lived and was at the shop of the deceased on the night of the murder, and that night both had slept on cots in front of the shop. In the morning the person was found murdered and the accused had disappeared. At the time the accused had come to the village he was wearing shoes and also possessed a tin box of cigarettes. A pair of shoes and a tin box were found at the shop, and the accused, who was discovered when followed along the foot-prints sitting amongst some crops, was bare footed. When the accused was discovered he was in possession of the property of exactly the same description as the stolen property. Blood-stains were also found on the shirt of the accused.

PENAL CODE (1860)—S. 302—Evidence—Confession.

Held: that circumstantial evidence was incompatible with the innocence and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis except that of his guilt and the accused could be sentenced to death: A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 513, Rel. on. (Barlee, J. C. and Aston, A. J. C.) KARIM BAKSH v. EMPEROR.

—How estimated.

The fundamental rule by which the effect of circumstantial evidence is to be estimated is well established. In order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt: A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 88, Foll. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Coldstream, J.) MIRZA v. EMPEROR. 96 I.C. 849=7 A.I.Cr. R. 68=27 Cr. L. J. 993. (Lah.)

—Inference of guilt—When justified—Facts sufficient to infer from.

Where a case depends entirely on circumstantial evidence, in order to justify the inference of guilt, the incriminating facts found against the prisoners must be incompatible with their innocence and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of their guilt: 8 C. W. N. 278 and 41 Cal. 601, Rel. on.

The following circumstances, as proved against the accused, were held sufficient to prove that he was responsible for the murder of deceased: (1) the deceased used to live at accused's house until he disappeared; (2) accused made no report about the sudden disappearance of the deceased to the police or to anybody else; (3) within a few days after the disappearance of the deceased his dead body was found in a well about half a mile from the house of the accused; (4) shortly after the recovery of the dead body the accused admitted to a friend of his that he had murdered the deceased; (5) and after this confession the accused produced from two places considerable valuable property worth Rs. 4,000 belonging to and in the possession of the deceased until his death. —Confession induced by promise of pardon—Subsequently retracted—Should be excluded—Other fact insufficient—Guilt not established.

M was convicted by the Sessions Court under Ss. 302 and 201, I.P.C., upon his own uncorroborated confession. M retracted the confession at the first opportunity alleging that the confession was put into his mouth by the police who tortured him in order to induce him to turn an approver. The prosecution never alleged that M was the only person concerned either in the murder or in the burial, but admitted that after the confession, efforts were made to induce him to become an approver. The prosecution evidence did not establish the existence of any motive on the part of M, and there was no independent evidence connecting him with the murder in material particulars except that G, the victim, with other co-accused who were acquitted of the charge of being the accomplices of M was seen in M's company shortly before the murder, that the corpse was found upon M's land and that M took the Magistrate to where the corpse was buried. The police, however, had known of the whereabouts of the corpse some days prior to M's confession.

Held: that in the circumstances, M's confession was probably due to the promise of pardon and, therefore, should be excluded from the evidence against M, and that if the confession was excluded, the rest of the evidence could not establish M's guilt. In view of the common diseases of this country whose symptoms are almost indistinguishable from that of arsenic poisoning it is very unsafe to convict a person without such evidence as can be obtained from a proper scientific enquiry. The proper enquiry consists in the careful examination of the viscera of the body and an analysis by a competent analyser showing from the amount of arsenic found in the viscera that at least a lethal dose must have been administered. Mere examination of the vomit or night-soil is totally insufficient and it is extremely dangerous to rely upon some traces of arsenic found in either of these two things. ledge but of any other more aggravated crime which has been connected with the theft; this particular fact of presumption forms also a material element of evidence in case of murder.

The presumption is particularly applicable where there is satisfactory proof in case of a murder of a woman that the stolen articles were habitually worn by the deceased and that she was actually seen wearing it on the evening before the murder: 17 C.W.N. 1077, Ref.: A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 638 and A.I.R. 1926, Lah. 691, Dist. —Poisoning by members of family—Death shortly after food prepared by wife—No explanation as to cause of death—Corpse hidden—Presumption violent.

A violent presumption that the deceased was poisoned by the members of the family arises, perhaps one of the strongest presumptions known to the law, when a man dies in his own house surrounded by his own family, and poisoned shortly after eating food which must have been prepared for him by his wife, and no explanation is forthcoming from the occupants of the household as to what had happened to him to cause his death, and where, in addition to such violent presumption, the persons accused are proved to have been guilty of persistent lying in an attempt to account for the absence of the deceased, and are also shown to have hidden the corpse to save themselves, the presumption becomes a certainty. —S. 302—Evidence—Robbery and murder.

—Evidence sufficient for robbery—Not sufficient for murder.

In a case of murder the following facts were found:—The accused found the deceased playing with three other companions, gave him a melon and took him away on the promise of giving him more. The accused and deceased were afterwards seen together near the canal by one witness and after that deceased was never seen alive again. The medical man who conducted the post-mortem examination was unable to give any opinion as to the cause of death because putrefaction was too far advanced. Melon seeds were found in the deceased's stomach at the post mortem examination. The accused's shoes were found near the canal bridge hidden in some reeds. Deceased when taken away by the accused was wearing 3 ornaments and these were not on his dead body. The appellant subsequently had knowledge of the place in which these ornaments were concealed and himself dug them up during the police investigation.

Held: that assuming these findings to be correct they do not exclude every reasonable hypothesis other than that the deceased's death was caused by the accused. If the accused can be held to have robbed the deceased it does not follow necessarily that he afterwards killed him. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Campbell, J.) WALLU v. EMPEROR. 77 I.C. 433=

The accused who was greatly displeased with the wife of his brother, came to get her child from her. He took away the child without her consent. Later on he was over-persuaded by other men to let the child remain. He then proceeded to give the child some sweets. Directly afterwards the child was taken ill and died. The child's viscera was sent to Chemical Examiner who deposed that an extract from viscera produced tingling sensation when rubbed on the tongue and killed frog on injection. He gave as his opinion that death was due to aconite poisoning. The Civil Surgeon was of opinion from the condition of the mucous membrane of the stomach and the points of haemorrhage that death was due possibly to irritant poisoning. There were other symptoms which pointed to aconite poisoning.

—Saving family honour—Murder of erring wife.

The reason for passing a lesser sentence on conviction for murder ought to be express and adequate. Such reasons are sometimes to be found in the order of the mentality to which the person belongs. —Quarrel over a pumpkin—Provoked by abuse—Striking with a lump of limestone weighing 3 lbs.—No intention—Knowledge presumed.

There was no enmity between accused and deceased. The accused's wife and the deceased who were the wives of two brothers were quarrelling about sharing a pumpkin. The accused coming along broke the pumpkin into two against the wishes of the deceased wherefore she abused him. He thereupon struck her with a lump of limestone weighing 3 pounds. This resulted in the injury.

—Plunging knife into stomach—Intention to cause death or fatal injury—If can be presumed—

PENAL CODE (1860), S. 302—Knowledge.

Rule of intending natural or probable consequences of act—If applicable to Indian Criminal law.

Per Cuming, J.—The natural result of plunging a knife into a man's stomach is death or such bodily injury as is likely to result in death. The man who plunges a knife into another man's stomach must know that it would cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death and that hence death would be the probable result of his act. The man who does such an act therefore must be held to intend to cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to result in death, for a man is presumed to intend the natural consequence of his action. If he had not that knowledge or intention in the circumstances and he did the act with some other knowledge or intention then it is for him to prove it, for that is a fact peculiarly within his own knowledge.

Per Mukerji, J.—The presumption that one must be taken to intend the natural or probable consequences of his act—a rule of English criminal law which, originally but a rule of evidence, has now acquired the dignity of a legal axiom—is not always quite easy to apply to the Indian Criminal Law in view of the distinction that the Indian Penal Code makes between intention and knowledge. On the question of knowledge much depends on the intellectual capacity of the actor. (Cuming and Mukerji, JJ.) HAZRAT GUL KHAN v. EMPEROR. 109 I.C. 482=

—Stab in the stomach—Sufficient in ordinary course to cause death—Intention to cause injury sufficient to cause death presumed.

Common knowledge and experience tell us that any cut into peritoneum and stomach, is sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death, unless done by a skilful surgeon under safe-guards discovered during comparatively recent years. The fact that persons have under medical treatment, recovered from wounds in the stomach affords no ground for holding that a stab in the stomach, is not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. If a person stabs another in the abdomen with sufficient force to penetrate the abdomen walls, and the internal viscera, he must undoubtedly be held (whatever his station in life) to have intended to cause injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. —Avoiding vital parts—Prolonged and deliberate thrashing—No intention to cause death—Knowledge that ordinarily death must result present.

If a man is killed as a result of innumerable blows none of which in itself is sufficient to cause death and if the assailants have deliberately avoided striking any vital parts, under some circumstances the inference may be drawn that by avoiding dealing blows upon vital parts of the body they showed that they did not intend to cause death but, rather, carefully avoided causing death. But on the other hand, if the circumstances show that a prolonged thrashing has been deliberately administered with the knowledge of the assailants that such a thrashing must in the ordinary course of nature result in death, the assailants are guilty of murder. They may avoid striking a vital part deliberately so as to put themselves in a position, if the assault is brought home to them, to plead that they never intended to do more than administer a thrashing. 2 Bur. L.J. 99=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 33.

—S. 302—Motive.

—Proof of motive—Immaterial.

Where no sufficient motive for the assault on the deceased is shown the mere fact that the prosecution does not establish any additional motive for the assault cannot be taken as a fatal defect in the prosecution case. The accused may be the only surviving person knowing the cause of enmity with the deceased, and the failure of the prosecution to elicit it is not a sufficient reason to disbelieve the eye-witnesses. (Addison and Hilton, JJ.) SEWA SINGH v. EMPEROR.

A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 490.

—Adequacy or otherwise of—Foisting of offence on accused—Probabilities.

If the Court is satisfied as to the fact of murder the adequacy or inadequacy of the motive is not of importance. It is possible to conceive that relations might make a false charge against the husband of the murder of his wife but not when the husband just before murdering his wife, assaulted them and inflicted serious injuries. The obvious thing which they would do would be to accuse the man who had assaulted them. (Beasley, C.J., and Cornish, J.) PEDDA PULLAPPA v. EMPEROR. 1929 M.W.N. 592.

—Absence of—Powerful influence or homicidal tendency—Not inferred.

PENAL CODE (1860), S. 302—Murder or hurt.

The circumstances of an act of murder being apparently motiveless is not a ground from which the existence of a powerful and irresistible influence or homicidal tendency can be safely inferred. (Zafar Ali and Jai Lal, JJ.) INAYAT v. EMPEROR.

112 I.C. 222 = 29 Cr. L.J. 1006.

—Failure to prove motive—Immaterial—But relevant to prove intention.

Per Cuming, J.—When in a case of murder facts are clear, it is immaterial that no motive has been proved. The motive which induces a man to do any particular act is known to him and to him alone. At the highest the prosecution can only suggest what is or may be the motive for any particular act. It may be known only to the accused or possibly to the deceased and it is quite impossible to prove.

Per Mukerji, J.—Motive though not a sine qua non for bringing the offence of murder home to the accused is relevant and important on the question of intention. Where the accused knew what he was doing when he struck the deceased on the head with a hatchet and also knew that his act was imminently dangerous to life, he can be rightly convicted under S. 302.

But where there is no premeditation nor any enmity between the accused and the deceased or his relation and the attack on the deceased is the result of foul language used by him, the extreme penalty of law is not called for and sentence of transportation for life is sufficient to meet the case. When the deceased makes improper overtures to the accused who is her step-son and the latter in a fit of resentment stabs her with a knife to death, the act of the deceased does not amount to grave and sudden provocation and the accused is guilty of murder. —S. 302—Sentence—Crime to absolve crime.

Per Percival, J. C. and Wild, A. J. C.—Where an accused commits one criminal offence, it is no palliation of his guilt that to absolve himself from punishment he commits another and more grievous offence, namely murder.

Per Rupchand, A.J.C.—It is not improper to inflict a lesser sentence where there are circumstances demanding the exercise of such discretion as for instance the absence of strong motive coupled with the possibility of the murder having been committed without premeditation and under temporary derangement of the mind due to the fear of being prosecuted and convicted for a criminal offence. But the exercise of such discretionary powers; under S. 302, Penal Code, in any particular case must depend on its own facts considered in the light of various circumstances such as the magnitude of the mischief which the crime has a tendency to produce, the effect of the punishment in preventing similar crimes the motive or inducement to the crime, aggravating or instigating circumstances and the like. When murder is committed for lust or for rape perhaps it is necessary to take the life of the murderer not so much as to prevent him from committing similar offences but to serve as a deterrent to others for committing similar offences. Again when a crime of a particular character is rampant in any locality, extreme penalty of law is necessary to serve as a deterrent. (*Wild, A.J.C. on difference between Percival, J. —No ground for lenience—Murder not wholly deliberate and cold blooded—Some provocation—Capital sentence not appropriate.

In cases where the murder has been deliberately planned and is essentially of a cold blooded and contemptible nature, the death sentence is appropriate whatever be the age of the accused provided his case does not come under S. 22, Madras Children Act 4 of 1920. But where the murder by a juvenile cannot be said to be wholly deliberate and cold blooded, and where there may be a certain amount of legitimate provocation ranking, which in an immature mind might assume an exaggerated importance, the capital sentence might assume as in certain cases not be the appropriate one. (Wallace and Ananthakrishna Iyer, JJ.) KOLANDA NAYAKAN v. KING-EMPEROR. 1930 M.W.N. 681 = 32 M.L.W. 220.

—No ground for mitigation—Inability to understand nature of the act—Influenced by older persons—Extenuating circumstances.

There is no law which justifies a court in not passing a sentence of death on any person merely because he is young. All persons who can understand their acts are liable to the extreme penalty of the law. Youth may be a circumstance to be taken into consideration in offences where the accused person is not fully able to understand the nature of his act or has been influenced by older persons. The sentence of transportation for life is imposed in cases where there are in the opinion of the court some extenuating circumstances. (Raza and Pullan, JJ.) EMPEROR v. —Brutal crime—No reason for mitigation.

Murder resulting in death is a particularly ruthless and brutal crime and, therefore, the mere fact that the murderer is 18 years of age is a wholly insufficient reason for not imposing the appropriate sentence provided by law: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 531, Foll. —No reason for mitigation.

Although ordinarily in cases of deliberate murder the major sentence allowed by the law should be imposed, yet it cannot be affirmed that the tender age of an accused is not of itself a sufficient reason for passing the lesser sentence, i.e., transportation for life. Any definite standard as to the limit of age in this connexion cannot be laid down, as circumstances must vary with the particular case: 11 C.W.N. 904, Rel. on: A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 65, Diss. from (*Findlay, J.C. and Prideaux, A. —Continual ill-treatment of daughter-in-law by mother-in-law—Beating—Death—No evidence showing intention or knowledge of likelihood of causing death—Mother-in-law was held not guilty under S. 304 but under S. 323.

On the day before the death the deceased spilt some oil and her mother-in-law, the accused gave her a beating. The thing was done openly at 8 a.m. in the view of a number of neighbours. The evidence did not show that the accused either intended or contemplated the death of the deceased as a result of the beating which was inflicted on her. It was clear that the accused had taken a dislike to her daughter-in-law, that she underfed her, kept her short of clothes, and used at times to beat her. The circumstances in which the beating took place formed the strongest evidence that the accused did not realise that it was anything out of the ordinary or might produce serious consequences. There was no evidence, medical or other, to support the view that the ill-treatment by the accused would certainly have terminated in her death from natural causes if the accused had not accelerated it by beating her. The lack of nutrition had not reached a point which was in itself dangerous, or which suggested a deliberate attempt to starve the girl.

Held: that the evidence did not establish an offence under Section 304, still less under Section 302 against the accused. But that the offence under Section 323 of the Indian Penal Code had been committed and the maximum penalty under that section must be imposed. There was no intention on the part of the accused's partisans of causing the death of or grievous injury to the owners of the cattle. The desire was to chastise the owners of the cattle which caused damage. One of the blows was hit on the temple and killed the deceased.

—Wife having immoral connexion—Husband's protest resulting in abuse—Husband in agony loses self-control and deals fatal blow—Accused held guilty under S. 304, para. 2.

A woman was leading a notoriously immoral life which was the common scandal of the village. She had a young lover who was known to the accused her husband. On the night previous to the murder she had a mysterious and significant disappearance from the bed side of her husband and subsequent protest by the husband resulted only in vulgar abuse by her. PENAL CODE (1860), S. 304—Sudden quarrel and provocation.

Held: that the refusal of his wife to give him pan was liable to make him angry but the throwing of dirty water in the face was an act which would cause a husband to lose control of himself and would be a grave and sudden provocation and therefore the offence was not one of murder but of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. —Accused, a person of considerable intelligence accepting unequivocally his guilt—Accused can be convicted without taking whole evidence in the case—Accused's petition of appeal to High Court raising bare possibility of applicability of I. P. C., S. 304—Whole evidence returned to.

The accused was undoubtedly a man of very considerable intelligence, and having beyond question killed a woman, made a few hours later, on the same day, a perfectly clear statement about the facts, and later, on the day after the crime, gave to a Magistrate of the first class the most clear and convincing account of the whole occurrence, and stated as a preliminary to it that he knew that he could be convicted on his own statement. Before the S. J. he agreed that he had made the two statements referred to above, and pleaded guilty and said he killed the woman with the chopper produced and the reason for killing her was jealousy. The accused elaborated in his petition of appeal to the High Court, the statement he had made before the S. J. to the effect that he killed the woman out of jealousy. That document gave rise to the bare possibility that the accused might be able to put forward some ground for the application of S. 304 of the I. P. C.

Held: that though there was before the S. J. enough material to make him perfectly confident as to the guilt of the accused, yet in view of the contents of his petition of appeal to the High Court, the safer and better course would be to return the case to the S. J. with a direction to him to put accused up for

Unless it is shown clearly and without possible doubt that the intention was to cause death where a substance is administered as a love potion, the accused cannot be convicted of murder. The mere administering of a love potion or drug which a person thinks might be beneficial is not in itself an offence but when it is supposed to have effect upon persons with whom the paramour of the accused had enmity, and when she administers it without due care and caution or any enquiry as to what it really is, her act falls within S. 304-A. —Driving motor at night along a road under repair—Persons sleeping on the road killed—Motor running at slow speed—Offence under S. 304-A is not committed.

Criminal rashness is hazarding a dangerous or want-on act with the knowledge that it is so and that it may cause injury, but without intention to cause injury or knowledge that it will be probably caused. The criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequence. Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted: 3 All. 776 and 7 M. H. C. 119 Foll.

There is nothing rash or negligent per se in driving along a road under repair or partly under repair any more than on a road not under repair except perhaps to the person driving. Any one driving on a road under repair would be called on to exercise the same caution as he would on a road in its normal condition, that is to say, to look out to see what persons or vehicles were on the road making the ordinary use of the road; but it cannot possibly be held that a driver should anticipate that he will find persons sleeping on a road even at night, though a road is under repair, and that he must look out for persons making such an abnormal use of the road, and if he does not do so he is guilty of negligence or rashness.

There is nothing to prevent a man talking and at the same time taking the ordinary precautions against accident and, therefore, engaging in conversation whilst driving is not necessarily a rash or negligent act. (Cuming and Mukerji, J.J.) SMITH v. EMPEROR.

—S. 307—Facts to be considered.

Intention of culprits should be gathered from their acts and surrounding circumstances.

Intention of the culprits has to be gathered from their acts and all the surrounding circumstances.

Where from the circumstances there can be no doubt that the intention of the accused was to cause the death of a person, they must be assumed to have intended the natural consequences of their act and the burden lies heavily on them to prove that they had some other intention. In absence of any such proof the accused can be held guilty under S. 307. (Jai Lal and Bhide, JJ.) GOPI CHAND v. EMPEROR.

A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 491.

Important consideration under S. 307, is intention or knowledge of accused and circumstances under which offence is committed—Nature of injury is not necessarily guiding consideration.

Section 307 makes a distinction between an act of the accused and its result if any. Such an act may not be attended by any result so far as the person assaulted is concerned but still there may be cases in which the culprit would be liable under S. 307. If a person knows that certain result will ensue from his act he must be deemed to intend such result by doing the act. Further it is not necessary that the injury actually caused to the victim of the assault should be sufficient under ordinary circumstances to cause the death of the person assaulted. What the Court has to see is whether the act, irrespective of its result, was done with the intention or knowledge and under circumstances mentioned in S. 307: 15 Bom. L. R. 991, Dist. (Jai Lal, J.) MUTALLI v. EMPEROR.

—S. 307—Mutual Infliction of Injuries.

Mutual infliction of injury on each other—No eye-witnesses—Conviction must be under S. 326 and not under S. 307.

Where in the course of a fight the two accused inflicted upon each other injuries so serious that in both cases their dying depositions had to be taken there were no eye-witnesses to the occurrence and evidence in each trial consisted of the evidence of the complainant, the wounds on the complainant and the admission of the accused that he was himself wounded in the occurrence, and where in separate trials each was convicted of an offence under S. 307 of the Penal Code.

Held: as in case of either of the accused dying of the wounds, the other would have been entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt and to plead that the case came within exception 4 to S. 300, neither appellant could legally be convicted under S. 307.

Held further that as under S. 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proof of self-defence or provocation would have been in each case on the accused, neither of them could under the circumstances claim these defences and that S. 326, was the proper section for conviction. Causing hurt and using force are not the same thing and the word "force" does not appear in the definition of "hurt". The use of criminal force is no doubt an ingredient of the offence of rioting, but the force necessary to constitute these offences may fall far short of "causing bodily pain," and if further force is used which does cause bodily pain, then the offences which involve and are complete by mere use of criminal force have been exceeded and that excess constitutes another offence, viz., that of causing hurt, or causing whatever more serious form of bodily hurt has been the result: Mad. PENAL CODE (1860), S. 323—Injuries on fight. and makes a person guilty of the offence of rioting as distinct from actually causing any injury or hurt. Similarly S. 323 is a distinct offence in itself; therefore there is nothing illegal in convicting a person of offences under both these sections. —Fight over cattle trespass—Accused's party desirous of chastising cattle-owners—Accused holding deceased and his partisans beating him with lathis—Death caused by blows on temple—Accused is guilty only under S. 323.

There was a quarrel and fight over cattle trespass and the party in whose field trespass was committed disposed of the party of the owners of cattle, as the supporters of the owners came one by one. When the deceased came up, the accused caught his hands and some of the members of his party hit deceased with lathi. There was no intention on the part of the accused's partisans of causing the death of or grievous injury to the owners of the cattle. The desire was to chastise the owners of the cattle which caused damage. One of the blows was hit on the temple and killed the deceased.

Held: that the accused must have expected that simple injuries would be caused and he could not be held liable for one of his party hitting a blow on the

Held: although the child was hit by accident the appellant's act was not covered by the exception of S. 80, that he was not guilty of culpable homicide under S. 301 as, while wanting to hit the woman with his fist the appellant never intended or knew to be likely to cause the death of the woman, and that it would be proper to record a conviction under S. 325. 3 C. 623 Ref. —Accused in fit of temper losing self-control—Blow on head with dang—Death held not intentional.

The accused, who was chagrined because his melons were not purchased, went into a fit of temper and lost self-control. The dang, with which the blow on the uncovered head of the deceased came to be inflicted, was lying close at hand. The accused picked it up and at once dealt the blow which resulted in the fatal injury to the deceased.

Held: that there was no intention on the part of the accused to cause the death;

Held further: that the case fell within the purview of S. 325 instead of S. 302. (Agha Haidar and Shadi Lal, JJ.) KALOO MURD v. EMPEROR. 1929 Cr.C. 639=A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 863.

Held: It was not possible to attribute any particular injury to any individual assailant. Nor could it be said that any particular injury was the direct cause of death. The common intent of the assailants could not be held to have been to cause such injury as they knew was likely to result in death. The accused could not therefore be safely convicted of murder. They were guilty of grievous hurt. (Fford and Jai Lal, JJ.) YARA v. EMPEROR. 114 I.C. 704=

They did so after an exchange of words with the deceased, and caused two incised wounds of a trivial character, and three contused wounds sufficient to stun the victim, who subsequently died. Held: that the accused were guilty under S. 325 read with S. 149, and not under S. 304. (Addison and Johnstone, JJ.) SOHAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. 118 I.C. 433=30 Cr.L.J. 917= —Intention of causing death or injury likely to cause death absent—Liability.

Where the accused could not have known that they were inflicting such injury as would be likely to cause death and the intention of causing death or of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death was not even imputed to them and the injuries were not directly responsible for the death, but the death was only an indirect consequence of the wounds.

Held: that the accused cannot be convicted under S. 304, but the conviction should be under S. 325. (King, J.) BHURE KHAN v. EMPEROR. 101 I.C. 177= 2 Luck. 433=8 A.I.Cr.R. 46=4 O.W.N. 337= 28 Cr.L.J. 401=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 36.

—Culpable homicide—More than one person aggressive—Common object to inflict grievous hurt presumed.

Where six persons, one of whom had an iron shod lathi, came determined to take possession of a taur while the deceased was determined to resist them and the person having the iron-shod lathi inflicted the fatal injury on the head of the deceased and thus fractured his skull and killed him:

Held: that the members of the party were undoubtedly the aggressors and they certainly knew that grievous hurt was likely to be inflicted and came prepared in furtherance of their common object to inflict it.

Further, the man who inflicted the fatal injury when he aimed the blow he did, at the deceased's head, knew that there was a likelihood of his death, seeing that he had brought with him such a lathi. (Addison, J.) HOSHNAKH SINGH v. EMPEROR. 9 L.L.J. 522=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 884.

—Blow with stick on the head, in revenge for previous beating—Internal bleeding and death—Liability.

The accused and the deceased were both young men of about 18 years. The deceased and a friend of his gave a beating to the accused. The next day the accused unexpectedly met the deceased, and forthwith formed the design of hitting him in return for the beating which he had received. Then he struck him a violent blow on the back of his head with a hockey stick which he was carrying and ran away. The deceased walked on for about 30 paces and sat down. He was taken home where, half an hour later, he was unconscious. The blow caused internal bleeding and a clot of blood on the surface of the brain. This caused death.

PENAL CODE (1860), S. 325—Joint attack.

Held: that the accused was not guilty of murder, but of an offence under S. 325 as it could not be said under the circumstances of the case that the accused knew that the blow was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or that the bodily injury which he intended to cause was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. —S. 325—Sentence.

—Blows on head causing death—No uncertainty as to responsibility for offence—Sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment held proper.

The accused had caused death by blows on head of the deceased with sticks. It had been proved that the accused were the assaulters and were aware of the result of their action. There was no uncertainty as to responsibility for the offence by which death was caused.

Held: that under the circumstances the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment was reasonable whether the offence be under S. 304 (2) or S. 325: 29 All. 282, Dist. (Mirza and Broomfield, J.J.) MANA GENDAL v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 483.

Held: that under the circumstances the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment was too short and should be enhanced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. It was a brutal thing for a man to beat a woman with a heavy stick and hurt her on vital parts of her body causing such injuries that she died in two days. (*Beaumont, C. A. B. C. D. assembled together, three of them armed with spears with the intention of attacking another party of men. A gave only one blow with a spear on fleshy part of the body of one of his opponents.

Held: that such injury was not necessarily fatal and A could not be convicted under S. 302 and his case fell within the purview of S. 326, but as there had been a loss of life in the fight, a severe sentence was called for. A's companions having been acting in furtherance of a common intention were also guilty under S. 326 read with S. 34. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Agha Haider, J.) FATEKH KHAN v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. Held that considering the nature of the assault and the nature of the weapons, it cannot be said with regard to any one of them that he did not mean to cause serious injuries and S. 34, makes them equally responsible in such cases and each one of them was rightly given the same sentence. occurrence, and where in separate trials each was convicted of an offence, under S. 307 of the Penal Code.

Held: as in case of either of the accused dying of the wounds, the other would have been entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt and to plead that the case came within exception 4 to S. 300, neither appellant could legally be convicted under S. 307.

Held further that as under S. 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proof of self-defence or provocation would have been in each case on the accused, neither of them could under the circumstances claim these defences and that S. 326, was the proper section for conviction. (Lentaigne, J.) NGA PO E v. EMPEROR. 84 I.C. 1049=2 Rang. 558=26 Cr. L.J. 409=A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 133.

—Fight over bund—Rival parties—One party seeking to cut down bund—Fight—Death of one—Liability—Plea of Private Defence.

People of the village S having assembled, proceeded to cut the bandh. People of village K resisted but were turned back. Meanwhile a large crowd collected on both sides, armed with lathis, spears and garases. People of K, seeing that the people of S were not likely to listen to their remonstrances, proceeded in a body to prevent them from cutting the bandh and to drive them away. A free fight ensued; one man from village S, received mortal injuries and died on his way to the hospital. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused, who were residents of K under S. 302 read with Ss. 147, 148 and 149, I. P. C.

Held: that the people of S had no right to cut the bandh under the circumstances mentioned and when they actually proceeded to destroy it the people of K had certainly a right to prevent them from doing so.

Held: further that the people of K had erected a Bandh in their own village and at the time of the occurrence they were in possession of the bandh and there had been no lawful order passed by any competent Court directing them or authorising people of K to remove the bandh. This being so, it was not unlawful on the part of the appellant to prevent the people of S, from forcibly cutting the bandh, and that consequently their convictions under Ss. 147, 148 and 149, could not be sustained.

Held: also that under the circumstances of the case and keeping in view the fact that mortal injuries were caused to the deceased in a free fight and in the exercise of the right of private defence of person and property, the conviction of the accused appellants under S. 302 could not be sustained, especially when the deceased had received injuries from several other assailants. The conviction was therefore altered to one under S. 326, and the sentence of transportation for life passed was reduced to one of three years' rigorous imprisonment. (*Courtney-Terrell, C. The accused had been married to a girl and the ceremony of tabdil parchat was to take place on the day of the occurrence. On that day accused found the deceased taking the girl away from the village where the ceremony was to take place and when he remonstrated with her she told him that the girl would not be married to him that day and abused him. The accused thereupon attacked both the girl and the deceased with pen-knife and inflicted one injury on each in the abdomen. The girl however survived.

PENAL CODE (1860), S. 332—Essentials.

Held, that the accused acted without premeditation, used only a pen-knife and gave each woman only one injury and therefore there is a very strong presumption that he neither intended to cause death nor such bodily injury as he knew to be likely to cause death and that the provocation given to him by the deceased was sufficiently grave and sudden to bring him within the first exception in Section 300. Held, further that when the accused wounded the women in the abdomen with a pen-knife he certainly intended to cause them grievous hurt. —S. 328—Dhatura poison.

—Administering Dhatura to cause a girl to fall in love with accused is an offence where delirium was caused.

The accused a boy of about 16 years of age became infatuated with a girl Mt. Chando and began to make advances to her and did various tricks to make her inclined towards him. Ultimately he persuaded Kanhaiya, a boy of about 12 years of age to take five Peras one of which contained dhatura in order that they might be given to Mt. Chando and other members of her family. Kanhaiya did distribute these peras to various people, including Mt. Chando. All the persons who took these peras showed symptoms of poisoning, and Mt. Chando was in a state of delirium.

Held: that the intention to persuade Mt. Chando by some mysterious means or other to fall in love with him, cannot be said to be an intention to commit or facilitate the commission of any offence. But dhatura is a very common drug, and it is well known that it is poisonous and a person of the age of the accused must be presumed to know that such a drug is poisonous.

Held further: that if a person by the administration of dhatura is thrown into a delirium, with the possible risk of falling into coma and becoming unconscious for the time being, both bodily pain and infirmity are caused and therefore the accused was guilty under S. 328. While a very evenly contested wrestling match organised by a Municipal Board was going on, one of the constables, who had been invited by the organizers to keep peace and order happened to be a backer of one of the contestants. He interfered with the wrestling and thereupon a scuffle followed in which some of the police men were hustled and their uniform torn.

Held: that though in a case like this it is difficult for the crowd to resist rushing to the arena, there was no reason for the crowd to hustle the police, and therefore an offence under S. 332 was committed. —S. 334—Time of provocation.

—Provocation is necessary at the time of assault.

Police Officers had been harassing one R in the course of an investigation. In order to escape the high-handedness of the police and also out of feelings of shame and humiliation felt at the treatment meted out to him, R threw himself into a well. The high-handedness on the part of police was resented by R's friends and the police were roughly handled by them. Four persons were convicted of voluntarily causing hurt to police while discharging their public duties.

Held: that if the assault upon the police had been made while the actual torture of harassment of R was in progress then the position of the accused would have been different and other considerations would have arisen. But as the police officers were attacked after R had thrown himself into the well and escaped oppression, the accused had no justification in law to attack the police. Held: G desired a certain result to follow from the throwing of bricks and he deliberately threw the bricks at the temple for that purpose. There was neither rashness nor negligence in the act. G was not guilty under S. 336.

Held: further that the throwing of a brick at a temple is not declared to be an offence, nor is it prohibited by law. G's act was not therefore illegal and he was not guilty under S. 153. An act which amounts to attempt to commit rape does not lose that character merely because the offender does not display a determination to effect his object at all costs. But two conditions are requisite for an attempt to commit the offence. First, there must be an attempt to commit the offence and second, some act must be done towards the commission of the offence. The word "attempt" is not itself defined in the Penal Code and must therefore be taken in its ordinary meaning. And even if an act has been done towards the commission of the offence that alone does not bring the case within the section. From the moment when the intention is formed to commit an offence every act done which facilitates the commission of the offence, and which is done with that object in view, is in one sense an act done towards the commission of the offence, but the doing of every such act does not constitute an attempt to commit the offence. It must in every case be a question depending upon the circumstances whether a particular act done (with the requisite intention) towards the commission of an offence is sufficiently proximate to its commission to constitute an attempt or is so remote as merely to constitute preparation for its commission.

When a lady who was travelling alone in a train woke up from her sleep, she found the accused sitting on her berth. She jumped up and rushed screaming to the door, but the accused caught hold of her, put his hand over her mouth and threatened her with a revolver and made her sit down. She then managed to get to the window and open it but he caught her by the hair and pushed her on the seat—in a sitting position. He threatened to strangle her if she screamed. Then he began to unbutton his trousers and had unfastened the top button when she made an attempt to reach the communication cord. The accused then caught her by the wrist and in the struggle her wristlet watch was broken. Then immediately the accused released her and asked her name. She gave it and he apologised for molesting her, saying he had mistaken her for some other lady. It was established on the evidence that the accused entered the carriage with the intention of having intercourse by force if necessary, with a woman whom he then believed to be another than the one actually assaulted.

Held: that the acts were acts of preparation, done towards the commission of rape, but that singly or collectively they did not amount to an attempt to commit rape. They did, however, amount to an assault with the intent to outrage the modesty of a woman or which accused knew to be likely to have that result, and thus constituted an offence punishable under S. 354 of the Penal Code. —Ss. 359 to 369—Consent of Guardian.

—Lawful guardian (father) pledging daughter to creditor who pledged her to another—Father without demanding his daughter recovering her with the help of police—No offence under S. 361.

The pledging of a girl to secure a loan is not a legal contract and may not be enforced in law but if a minor is retained in the custody of a person with the consent of the lawful guardian he will not commit the offence of kidnapping in S. 361. It does not matter whether the consent is given for consideration or not. If after having obtained custody of a minor in a lawful manner with the consent of guardian the minor is married or disposed of in such a manner as to make it impossible for the lawful guardian to get back the custody of the minor, an offence under S. 361 would be committed and the temporary guardian doing any such act would be liable under S. 361 but so long as nothing is done which would render the restoration or exercise of the custody of the child by the lawful guardian impossible, the mere fact of transferring the guardianship by the temporary guardian would not constitute an offence.

C the lawful guardian of his minor daughter pledged her to J for a sum due. J pawned the girl to N for a loan. C hearing that his daughter was sold by J went in search of her and found her in N's house. He got her back after lodging information but without demanding her either from J, or N.

—On a charge under Ss. 366 and 376, the question of the age of the girl is very material and if the girl is less than 14 years of age, although she may have been love smitten and wrote love letters, her consent to acts referred to in Ss. 366 and 376 is in law immaterial. —Consent of minor does not prevent commission of offences under S. 366-A.

The aim of the provisions of S. 366-A is to prevent immorality and the provisions are framed more with the desire of the safeguarding the public interest of morality than the chastity of one particular woman. The consent therefore of the minor against whom the offence is committed is immaterial. The consent might have been induced and any reason given by the accused to move the girl from one place to another is sufficient inducement. Once the offence of inducement is proved, the girl's subsequent willingness will neither prevent the offence nor reduce the gravity of the offence. (Dalal, J.) BHAGWATI PRASAD v. —Custom of rakshasa marriage and subsequent consent by the girl does not prevent the acts technically constituting the offences.

The fact that the rakshasa form is in vogue among the Gonds and the subsequent consent by the girl to the marriage, cannot prevent the previous acts of taking away the girl by force, having sexual intercourse with her, and removal of her bracelets to prevent the girl going away, from constituting the offences of wrongful confinement and robbery when they are committed; and it does not even reduce their culpability, but under these circumstances there is no necessity for a heavy sentence. —Abduction is continuing offence—Each fresh removal is offence.

Certain persons conspired together to induce a Muhammadan girl of about 18 years to accompany them. Their intention was to make her over to the accused for marriage to accused's brother. The girl was brought to a certain place where the accused arrived on receiving a pre-arranged communication. The girl was not made over to him there, but they all started by train towards another direction and at a certain other Railway station got out of the train and told the accused to take charge of the girl. The girl, however, was not ready to accept the company of the stranger, got out of the train and refused to re-enter it. The accused thereupon caught hold of her hand and dragged her.

Held: that the accused could not be convicted of abetment of the original offence of abduction. His was a separate offence of abduction when he tried to compel the girl by force to go along with him from the railway station in question. Abduction is a continuing offence. The abduction was not completed when the girl was removed from her home. Every fresh removal of her constituted an offence of abduction. Where a girl was abducted forcibly but the accused was a second cousin and the motive for the abduction was evidently to bring about a marriage and that there was no evil desire to spoil the girl's future or to disgrace her:

—Guardian not quite opposed to the marriage—Offence less serious.

Where a girl of 18, was abducted from the custody of her mother and married to one of the accused who were her near relations and the report made by the mother to the police was to the effect that the accused being the nearest paternal relations had certainly superior right to the possession of the girl but that they had no right to take her away forcibly without paying the mother some compensation for the trouble and expense that she had incurred in bringing up the girl.

Held: that an offence was technically committed and accused was guilty under S. 366, but having regard to the fact that the parties are very close relations and that the mother herself did not take a very serious view of the matter when she lodged the first information report, a nominal sentence was sufficient. Incriminating evidence not inconsistent with innocence of accused—Conviction is not proper.

In a prosecution under S. 364, where there was no incriminatory evidence whatsoever against the accused beyond the fact that he and the deceased left together and were last seen together, and that the one returned without the other :

Held : that although circumstances lead to a high degree of suspicion against the accused, they cannot be said to be inconsistent with any reasonable theory in accused's favour other than that the accused lured the deceased away for the purpose of having him murdered, or being exposed to the danger of being murdered, and hence no conviction could be safely had. Seduction resulting in abduction need not be proved to be separate from that resulting in illicit intercourse.

In order to have conviction under S. 366 it is not necessary to establish by independent evidence that the girl was seduced to illicit intercourse and that such seduction was separate from and independent of the original seduction which resulted in her abduction. The proximity of both the events is an important factor and so long as the Court is satisfied that the effect of inducement which was the cause of abduction continued till the time of the illicit intercourse, it is legally open to it to hold that the girl was seduced to illicit sexual intercourse. B having lived at D for some time came back to M where his wife was living and told her that as he had got work at D, she should go with him to D to cook for him. In that way he induced her to leave M for D. When they reached D, they were met by one S and they all went together to the house of a woman K. When B's wife went to the house of K, she was told by K that her husband had sold her to S for Rs. 150 and that S would give her presents and make her happy. S also told her the same thing and asked her to come and live with him. B, S and K were all charged under S. 366.

Held : that the question was not merely whether the jury was satisfied that S made immoral proposal to the woman at D or whether the jury were satisfied that K was a woman who kept a house of a disorderly and disreputable character but the question which the jury had to answer was whether it was shown that the offence of the husband under S. 366 was abetted by S and K under S. 107 ; and the only way in which that could be made out was to see whether there was sufficient proof that before the husband left D for M he had a bargain with these people to that effect, that they knew that the girl could not be brought to D except by deceitful means and that, therefore, they abetted the offence under S. 366. Instead of doing so, they tried to sell her and being unsuccessful concealed her in the house of S where she was later on traced by her relations. It was contended that S did not know that D was a married girl.

Held : that even assuming that S did not know that D was a married girl, his attempt to sell her clearly made him liable under S. 366-A. The manner in which S tried to dispose of D was clear indication of his intention or knowledge that the girl would be subjected to illicit intercourse. Presumption—When woman is kidnapped it is with one or other intents mentioned in S. 366.

It is practically impossible for the prosecution in cases of kidnapping and abduction to establish affirmatively the intention with which a woman is abducted. But it is a fair and justifiable presumption that when any woman is kidnapped or abducted it is undoubtedly with one or other of the intents specified in S. 366. The intention is more or less a matter of inference though there may be cases where the matter is capable of direct proof. It is for the accused to explain away incriminating circumstances. The word "induce," is used in its ordinary meaning of any words of inducement flowing from one person to the girl. (Dalal, J.) RAM SARAN v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 All. 497.

—The word 'forced' as used in S. 366, is used in its ordinary dictionary sense and would include forced by stress of circumstances. (Mukerji and Jack, JJ.) PRAFULLA KUMAR BOSE v. EMPEROR. 50 C.L.J. 593 = 1930 Cr. C. 209 = A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 209.

—'Seduced' includes subsequent seduction for further acts of illicit intercourse.

The word 'seduced' as used in S. 366 should not be taken to have that narrow meaning of inducing a girl to part with her virtue for the first time but that even though a girl may have by the first act of seduction surrendered her chastity, subsequent seduction for further acts of illicit intercourse is also meant to be included: Rex v. Moon, (1910) 1 K. B. 818, Ref. (Mukerji and Jack, JJ.) PRAFULLA KUMAR BOSE v. EMPEROR. 50 C.L.J. 593 = 1930 Cr. C. 209 =
 A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 209.

—Words "seduced to illicit intercourse" do not refer to first act of seduction only.

The words "seduced to illicit intercourse" do not refer to first act of seduction or surrender of chastity but they refer also to subsequent co-habitation as well. The object of the section is to punish not the seduction by itself but the kidnapping of the kidnapped: 10 Bur. L. R. 196, Foll. (Dhawe and Fazl Ali, JJ.) KRISHNE MAHARANE v. EMPEROR. 1929 Cr. C. 379 = A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 651.

—The expression "enticing" involves that, while the person kidnapped might have left the keeping of the lawful guardian willingly, still the state of mind that brought about that willingness must have been induced or brought about in some way by the accused. (Srinivasa Ayyangar, J.) ABDUL SATHAR v. EMPEROR. 109 I.C. 907 = 27 M.L.W. 683 =
 29 Cr. L. J. 635 = 1 M. Cr. C. 65 =
 A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 585 = 54 M.L.J. 456.

—The expression "taking" in S. 361 is not confined to mere physical taking. There is such a taking as is indicated in the common expression: "If you will come along, I shall take you." The expression taking out of the keeping of the lawful guardian must, therefore, signify some act done by the accused which may be regarded as the proximate cause of the person going out of the keeping of the guardian or in other words, an act but for which the person would not have gone out of the keeping of the guardian as he or she did.

Where it was found that the girl, alleged to be kidnapped by the accused, had written letters in which she was desperately calling for him to come and take her away and she was soon after discovered to be with the accused or under his control:

Held: that from these two facts it is legitimately open to a Court of law to assume that he finally yielded to the solicitations and made it possible for her to get away and that is sufficient "taking" in law for the purposes of S. 363, I. P. C. (Srinivasa Ayyangar, J.) ABDUL SATHAR v. EMPEROR. 109 I.C. 907 = 27 M.L.W. 683 = 29 Cr. L.J. 635 =

—S. 375—Attempt.

Though rupture of the hymen is by no means necessary in law to constitute a rape the Courts are reluctant to believe that there could have been penetration without that, which is so very near the entrance, having been ruptured.

A lad of 18 was convicted of rape on a female child of 5½ years. The child, stripped of her trousers, was found seated on the naked thighs of the accused, but there was no bleeding from her private parts with the exception of fresh redness at the entrance to the vagina. The girl bore no other mark of injury and her hymen was intact. She also did not cry out;

Held; that this was not merely an indecent assault by the accused but that he attempted, though unsuccessfully to effect penetration and hence the offence was an attempt to commit rape. (Zafar Ali, J.) MAHARAJ DIN v. EMPEROR. 100 I.C. 116=

tion, but falling short of actual consummation, and possessing, except for failure to consummate, all the elements of the substantive crime; in other words, an attempt consists in the intent to commit a crime, combined with the doing of some act adapted to, but falling short of its actual commission; it may consequently be defined as that which if not prevented would have resulted in the full consummation of the act attempted.

Where the accused stepped across from his own roof to that of his neighbour at night and caught hold of his daughter, got on to the charpoy with her, undid the string of her pyjama and was seen struggling with her when the neighbour's wife came up in answer to her daughter's cries, and he then ran away:

Held: that he had been rightly convicted under Ss. 376-511: 47 Cal. 190 (S. B.) Foll. (Harrison, J.) KISHEN SINGH v. EMPEROR. 103 I.C. 199=

—Attempt to commit rape must be distinguished from preparation to commit rape and from indecent assault.

An act which amounts to attempt to commit rape does not lose that character merely because the offender does not display a determination to effect his object at all costs. But two conditions are requisite for an attempt to commit the offence. First, there must be an attempt to commit the offence and second, some act must be done towards the commission of the offence. The word “attempt” is not itself defined in the Penal Code and must therefore be taken in its ordinary meaning. And even if an act has been done towards the commission of the offence that alone does not bring the case within the section. From the moment when the intention is formed to commit an offence every act done which facilitates the commission of the offence, and which is done with that object in view, is in one sense an act done towards the commission of the offence, but the doing of every such act does not constitute an attempt to commit the offence. It must in every case be a question depending upon the circumstances whether a particular act done (with the requisite intention) towards the commission of an offence is sufficiently proximate to its commission to constitute an attempt or is so remote as merely to constitute preparation for its commission.

When a lady who was travelling alone in a train woke up from her sleep, she found the accused sitting on her berth. She jumped up and rushed screaming to the door, but the accused caught hold of her, put his hand over her mouth and threatened her with a revolver and made her sit down. She then managed to get to the window and open it but he caught her by the hair and pushed her on the seat—in a sitting position. He threatened to strangle her if she screamed. Then he began to unbutton his trousers and had unfastened the top button when she made an attempt to reach the communication cord. The accused then caught her by the wrist and in the struggle her wrist-let watch was broken. Then immediately the accused released her and asked her name. She gave it and he apologised for molesting her, saying he had mistaken her for some other lady. It was established on the evidence that the accused entered the carriage with the intention of having intercourse by force is necessary, with a woman whom he then believed to be another than the one actually assaulted.

Held: that the acts were acts of preparation, done towards the commission of rape, but that singly or collectively they did not amount to an attempt to commit rape. They did, however, amount to an assault.

—S. 376—Consent.

In a rape case the question of consent does not arise when the girl is under ten years of age. The fact that the accused was found to be suffering from gonorrhoea and the other party was not infected with the disease is by no means conclusive of his innocence. Uncorroborated testimony of the woman not sufficient—Evidence of resistance a good guide to determine consent.

Where there is no independent evidence in support of the statement of the complainant that she was raped by the accused it would be most dangerous to base a conviction on her uncorroborated testimony alone; the first and foremost circumstance that can be looked for in cases of rape is the evidence of resistance which one would naturally expect from a woman unwilling to yield to a sexual intercourse forced upon her. Such a resistance may lead to the tearing of clothes, the infliction of personal injuries and even injuries on her private parts. Where there is absolutely no evidence on the record of any struggle having taken place nor were marks of any injuries found on the person either of the complainant or of the accused, Held that the accused cannot be said to have had connection with the woman without her consent. —Claim of right being mere pretence—Jurisdiction of Criminal Court if ousted.

To constitute an offence under S. 379, I. P. C, the determining factor is the intention of the taker and where articles have been removed in the bona fide exercise of a right of ownership which is believed to exist the act does not amount to theft. The mere assertion of a claim is not sufficient to exclude the application of S. 378, I. P. C. Where the claim is no more than a pretence, the jurisdiction of the criminal Court is not ousted.

Per Curiam.—Not uncommonly the criminal Court is used as a lever to harass an inconvenient adversary. If there is a bona fide dispute as to the ownership in the property itself or as to right of way the straight course is to approach the Civil Court for the determination of the controversial questions of title as may arise between the parties. (Sen, J.) MADAN LAL v. EMPEROR. 1930 A.L.J. 457.

—Charge of cutting in private forest—Concerted move to create evidence of right—No bona fide claim.

The accused villagers were charged under S. 379 for illegally cutting and removing trees in the private forest of the proprietor. The entry in the Record-of-Rights that the jungle was private was not rebutted and the accused knew that they had no right to cut any trees and that to take without the landlord's consent would be theft. The mala fides of the cutting was evident from the fact that it was in wild excess of any reasonable requirements or of any customary right known. And it was in pursuance of a concerted movement to establish a right or rather to create evidence of a right to the only remaining jungle in the village in view of the approaching revisional settlement proceedings that the accused deliberately defied the law :

—Property in possession of A and A raising crops thereon—Removal of crops by B—Plea not open.

It is a well-settled principle of law that if property is taken under a bona fide claim of right, it will not amount to an offence under S. 379, even though the claim may be ill-founded in law or in fact; 44 Cal. 66; A. It must, however, be remembered that the claim put forward by the accused must be an honest one and it will be of no avail to him as a defence if it is found to be a mere colourable pretence to obtain and keep possession of the property. The decision on this point will depend in each case on the circumstances of that particular case, but it may be safely laid down as a general proposition that in cases where the alleged theft consists in the removal of crops grown on land, the most vital question to be investigated is as to which of the parties had grown the crops and a decision on this point will in the majority of cases enable the Court to come to a definite conclusion as to whether the claim of the accused is made in good faith or is a mere pretence, but it cannot be laid down as a universal rule that in every case where A removes crops grown by B, A necessarily commits an offence under S. 379, Penal Code: 9 C. Existence of a bona fide claim—When removal amounts to theft indicated.

It is quite possible that a person may have a claim which he believes to be good and yet in asserting that right he may do something which he knows he has no right to do. For instance he may know perfectly well that his claim is disputed and that if he wishes to enforce it his proper course is to do so by having recourse to the Courts. If knowing that, he prefers to take the law into his own hands by removing the property from the possession of his opponent, knowing that his opponent also lays claim to the property, then his act is dishonest and amounts to theft. He has caused wrongful gain or possession to himself and wrongful loss of possession to his opponent. (Carr, J.) RANGASWAMY V. EMPEROR.

—Accused acquitted because of incomplete evidence—Subject of theft should not be made over to him—Complainant retaining possession of the property cannot be required to execute bond till disposal of question of title.

It is an ordinary rule of law that when an accused is acquitted of a charge of theft and the property found with him is not found to be the subject of theft he is entitled to recover that property, but where the property is found to be the subject of theft and an acquittal is due to incomplete evidence property will not be delivered to him.

There is no authority for holding that a criminal Court is competent to direct the complainant to execute a fresh bond till the disposal of the question of title to the property, which was the subject of theft, by a civil Court. (Duval and G. N. Roy, JJ.) RASUL KHAN v. EMPEROR.

An easy method of differentiating between the offence of theft, cheating with delivery of property, criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust is to find out whether the original taking was honest or dishonest and whether it was with the consent of the owner or without it. In theft the original taking is without honesty and without the consent of the owner, and in criminal breach of trust it is with both. In obtaining property by cheating the taking is dishonest but with the consent of the owner, and in criminal misappropriation it is honest but without the consent of the owner. (*Hallifax, A. J. —Cash is not property except if it can be identified in specie.

Cash is not, strictly speaking, property except in so far as it is capable of being possessed and identified in specie. If it is certain that the actual coins found on the thieves or receivers of stolen property are the actual coins which have been the subject of theft then it is permissible to treat such cash as stolen property. It is often safer in such cases to inflict a fine and to apply the coins found on the person of the accused towards the payment of fine, and then to apply the amount of fine if necessary to compensation. But in no conceivable way can coins which have been put into circulation and passed on to the public be treated in the same way as stolen coins actually remaining in the possession of the thieves. The principle of caveat emptor never applies to currency coins. (Kennedy, J.C. and DeSouza, A.J.C.) PURSU v. EMPEROR.

—A thing does not become res-nullius merely on the owner of it determining to destroy or abandon it. It continues to be his property until completion of the process of abandonment or destruction—Abstraction of currency note which had been held up by currency officer for destruction is theft, though the process of destruction was partly done at the time of abstraction.

PENAL CODE (1860), Ss. 378 & 379—Miscellaneous.

A very clear distinction must be drawn between an intention to destroy and to abandon and an actual destruction and abandonment. The very fact that the owner of the property intends to destroy or abandon that property and hands it over to some person to effect those purposes is a clear indication that he still maintains his rights as the owner of that property and that those rights subsist until the abandonment or destruction is completed. 16 S.L.R. 197. (Referred to). As long as the destruction or abandonment is not fulfilled and as long as it is still in the hand of the owner to countermand such destruction or abandonment, the property is still the property of the owner and the taking it out of his possession is theft, and improper use of it is breach of trust. Abstraction of currency note which has been held up by the currency officer for destruction is theft though at the time of abstraction, the process of destruction had partly been done. —Owner of cattle rescuing them from cattle-pound, consisting of only a fencing, by opening its door—No offence under Ss. 380 and 454 but under Ss. 378 and 441.

The expression "building" must be regarded as indicating some structure intended for affording some sort of protection to the persons dwelling inside it or for the property placed there for custody. Any structure which does not afford any such protection by itself but merely serves as a fencing or other means of merely preventing ingress or egress cannot make the place a building or a house within the meaning of either of those two sections. Therefore, an owner of a cattle who rescues the cattle from such a cattle-pound by opening its door, does not commit an offence either under S. 380 or S. 454. —Threat to omit to do some act which accused is not legally bound to do—If punishable.

After the crops of judgment-debtor were attached by officer of Court, the accused took money from judgment-debtor promising to get the crops released.

Held, no offence was committed.

Before a person can be said to put any person into fear of any injury to that person, it must appear that he has held out some threat to do or to omit to do what he is legally bound to do in the future. On the other hand if all that a man does is to promise to do a thing which he is not legally bound to do and says if money is not paid to him he would not do that thing, such an act does not amount to an offence.

But a threat held out by the accused that he would not release the cattle belonging to complainant and taken away by the accused without his consent, unless he was paid some money for their release, does amount to extortion inasmuch as he did put him in fear of injury to his property, namely the cattle, as he must have felt that his cattle would remain with the accused so long as the money was not paid to him. This would be sufficient injury within the meaning of S. 44 of the Indian Penal Code. (Sultman, J.)

In the darkness of night, accused were alleged to have robbed the complainants of Rs. 50, which one of the complainants had on his person. The prosecution evidence was insufficient by itself to justify conviction. But the accused, while being examined under S. 342, Criminal P.C., admitted receiving Rs. 50 by way of fine, to hush up a criminal offence committed by one of the complainants. —No substantive offence—Effect.

Section 397 of the Indian Penal Code does not contain any substantive offence, but merely prescribes the minimum punishment which can be passed if robbery or dacoity is attended with certain circumstances mentioned therein. Therefore, a conviction merely under S. 397 has no meaning. The conviction in the case of a dacoity should be under S. 395 read with S. 397 of the Penal Code. (Sulaiman, J.) DUTTI v. EMPEROR.

Evidence which though not believed for the purpose of a conviction under S. 393, I. P. C. may yet be relied upon for the purpose of a conviction under S. 400. A conviction under S. 400 cannot be considered bad in law merely because the evidence on the record would also have justified a conviction of a specific offence under S. 395. When examining the general question of the existence of a gang the Court need not look for the complicity of every one of the accused in every one of the dacoities proved to have been committed. —S. 400—Interpretation.*—'Belong'—Meaning.

The word "belong" in S. 400 implies something more than a casual association. It involves the idea of continuity rather than of permanency and also of a connexion extending long enough to warrant the inference that the accused has identified himself with the gang which has for its object the habitual commission of dacoity. The essence of the section is the agreement habitually to commit dacoity not the actual commission or attempted commission of dacoities. The existence of such an agreement and the participation of any person in that agreement may be inferred from circumstances, (Rankin, C.J. and Chotzner, J.) SURESH CHANDRA v. EMPEROR.

—'Belong' Meaning.

The term "belong" in S. 400, implies something more than the idea of casual association: it involves the notion of continuity and indicates a more or less intimate connexion with a body of person extending over a period of time sufficiently long to warrant the inference that the person affected has identified himself with a band, the common purpose of which is the habitual commission of dacoity: 13 O. It cannot be laid down as a general proposition that a person who receives stolen property from a gang of the character prescribed in S. 401 is a member of the gang. The word "belong" used in S. 401 is no doubt very comprehensive, but the expression "to belong to a gang of persons, etc." conveys the same idea as "to be one of a gang of persons; etc." The object of the section obviously is to punish the persons who organize thieving expeditions and form a party to commit theft. A person who receives stolen property from them cannot be said to belong to their gang. (Zafar Ali, J.) ABDULLA v. EMPEROR. 99 I.C. 851 = 28 P.L.R. 19 = 28 Cr. L.J. 179 = A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 524.

The intention of the parties is that the articles should be returned in specie or produced at the time when the auction-sale is to take place. The covenant by the person entrusted that he would be liable to pay a certain amount is more by way of security than because the property is transferred to him with liberty to dispose of it or withhold it. An easy method of differentiating between the offence of theft, cheating with delivery of property, criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust is to find out whether the original taking was honest or dishonest and whether it was with the consent of the owner or without it. In theft the original taking is without honesty and without the consent of the owner, and in criminal breach of trust it is with both. In obtaining property by cheating the taking is dishonest but with the consent of the owner, and in criminal misappropriation it is honest but without the consent of the owner. Held: that offence under S. 403 was committed by B. B knew that the bullock did not belong to him. He did not make any inquiry as to real owner but set up a title to the bullock himself and tried to dispose of it with a view to make a wrongful gain to himself and a wrongful loss to the original owner. ——Post-master opening a V.P. article addressed to himself and extracting a railway receipt from it without paying for it for six days and making false entries in the P. O. books—Nature of offence.

A branch postmaster who was also a shop-keeper ordered a consignment of flour in order to meet the requirements of his shop and a value-payable envelope containing the railway receipt for the flour arrived at the branch post office. The postmaster opened it extracted the railway receipt, went down the station where the goods had by that time arrived, and took delivery. After six days he paid the price of the goods into the post office. In the meantime he made in the books of the post office entries and repeated daily "on account of the absence of the addressee".

Held: that, although the offence was a technical one in the sense that no loss was incurred by the post office and the money involved was voluntarily returned, it amounted to criminal misappropriation within the meaning of S. 403, Penal Code, and the postmaster was guilty under S. 52, Post. Where the property removed by the accused consisted of the rafters used in the house left by the deceased.

Held: the rafters were immovable property so long as they were attached to the house, but became moveable property when they were severed from the house and as the accused had no title to the house and the house was not in the possession of any person legally entitled to its possession, S. 404 applied, if, after severing the rafters from the house, they dishonestly removed them and misappropriated or converted them to their own use. —Proof of entrustment.

The property in respect of which Criminal breach of trust can be committed must be the property of some person other than the accused, or the beneficial interest or ownership of it must be in some other person and the offender must hold such property on trust for such other person or in some other way for his benefit. There can be entrustment and therefore no breach of trust merely because the owner of the property repudiates his obligations or commits other breach of contract in respect of them. It is settled law that where property is entrusted to a servant, it is the duty of the servant to give a true account of what he does with the property so entrusted to him. If such a servant fails to return the property or to account or gives an account which is shown to be false and incredible, it is ordinarily a reasonable inference that he has criminally misappropriated the property so entrusted to him and dishonestly converted it to his own use. In such cases the Courts are entitled to draw hostile inferences and presumptions from the action and statement of the servant. (Lentaigne, J.) SONA MIAH v. —S. 408—Gist of offence.

—Dishonest misappropriation—Mere delay in payment—Effect.

Mere retention of money or mere failure to return it does not necessarily raise a presumption of dishonest misappropriation. The mere fact that the payment was delayed is no ground for imputing a criminal intention. Though the ingredients of the offence of criminal breach of trust are somewhat broadly stated, there is no doubt as to their meaning. The sections dealing with the offence of criminal breach of trust were intended to punish an offence of which dishonesty is the essence. Any breach of trust is not an offence. It may be intentional without being dishonest or it may appear dishonest without being really so. In such cases the Magistrate should be slow to move. This caution is all the more necessary since there is a natural desire to secure speedy justice by having recourse to criminal law: 42 All. 522, Ref. (Raza, J.) RANGI LALL v. —Intention to deprive master of property.

The mental act or intent to deprive the master of his property is the gist of the offence under S. 408. The accused was engaged as a tonga driver, to drive his tonga on hire within the limits of Ludhiana Municipality. The accused had to bring back the tonga each evening and pay over his earnings while he was to receive a salary of Rs. 15 a month. He did not return one evening, and on the following day was pursued and arrested some 36 or 37 miles from Ludhiana. The accused in his defence at first denied the title of complainant,

The moneys were duly entered in cash book and receipt given as customary, but disobeying the instructions he retained the money. —S. 408—Legality of finding.

—Absence of definiteness of sum misappropriated—Effect of Cr. P. C. Sec. 222 (2).

The case was one of criminal misappropriation. As to the amount embezzled, the jury were not unanimous and they said they were not able to ascertain it definitely, but the majority of them were of opinion that it might be a thousand rupees or so out of the amount mentioned in the charge. The Judge agreed in the verdict. He, however, was of opinion that the amount embezzled was not a thousand rupees or so but nearly rupees five thousand. He accepted the verdict and convicted the accused.

Held : that the object of the amendment made by the introduction of Sub-section (2) to Section 222, Criminal Procedure Code was "not to amend the Penal Code, but merely to get rid of a technical difficulty in framing a formal document, viz., the charge." By this amendment the procedural law was altered to meet two difficulties. Under the law as it stood before, there was very great difficulty in convicting where there was a running account and where the prosecution was unable to put their hands on a specific item of which the particular sum was embezzled or to which it was attributable. The other difficulty was that under Section 234, Criminal Procedure Code, it was not allowed to have more than three offences of the same kind, and so the charge could not legally stand. The law on these two points was altered and altered for the better. It was not intended either to throw the onus on the accused by bringing a charge against him of a deficiency in his accounts or to do away with the necessity of proving the elements of the offence as laid down in the Indian Penal Code.

The offence of criminal breach of trust involves entrustment or dominion over property and dishonest misappropriation, conversion, use or disposal thereof. It is not possible to find these elements unless one can form a conception as to what the property is. There must therefore be a definite finding of a certain definite sum traced to the accused in order to form

A Municipal Committee handed over a war bond to a Bank with instructions to sell it at its market value and to remit the sale proceeds to the Committee. The bond was endorsed in favour of the Bank in order to facilitate its sale. Instead of selling the war bond, according to instructions received by the Bank, the directors of the Bank pledged it with another Bank against cash payment and that amount was utilized by the directors to meet some urgent demands made on their Bank as the Bank was short of cash at that time and the customers were pressing for payment.

Held: that the property in the bond as between the Municipal Committee and the Bank was still retained by the Municipal Committee and did not vest in the Bank. By making use of the bond in a manner which was contrary to the conditions under which it was entrusted to the Bank the directors, who knew of this fact, caused unlawful loss to the Municipal Committee and unlawful gain to the Bank and were guilty under S. 409. The word "consequence" in S. 179 does not include all the possible results of an act, but is restricted in its scope to certain specified results; those are the results specified in the provision of the law making the act an offence. The offence of criminal breach of trust is complete with the act of conversion and the intention to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss. That intention can only be formed or at least can only be proved to have been formed at the place where the conversion takes place. Section 409 cannot properly be construed as involving that any head of an office, who is negligent in seeing that the rules about remitting money to the treasury are observed, is ipso facto guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust, but something more than that is required to bring home the dishonest intention, which is one of the essentials of a conviction under S. 409. There should be some indication which justifies a finding that the accused definitely had the intention of wrongfully keeping Government out of the money; and ordinarily that would be shown by some overt act, which went beyond mere retention of money that should have been remitted to the treasury. He is guilty of gross dereliction of duty in not seeing that the rules are observed: 11 P.R. 1908 Kel. on; 12 Mad. 49, Ref. (Fawcett and Mirza, JJ.) LALA ROOJI v. EMPEROR.

—Proof of facts from which knowledge can be presumed.

The knowledge or belief which is required to be established in order to bring the case under S. 411 implies the existence and the presence of facts or circumstances from which the accused was either made aware or ought to have been made aware of the nature of the property. It may be sufficient to show that the circumstances were such as to make him believe that the property was stolen. The word "knowledge" means a mental cognition and not necessarily visual perception. It implies a notice to the Receiver of such facts as could not but have led him to believe that the property was stolen and could not but have been dishonestly obtained. It therefore lies on the prosecution to prove the presence of certain facts from which the accused might have drawn the inevitable conclusion that the property was stolen property. It is not sufficient in such a case to show that the accused person was careless or that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired: 6 Bom. 402, Foll. Among the articles she mentioned was a dhoti said to have had a tear in the border. A few days after the police searched the accused's house and in the presence of two search witnesses a dhoti was found hanging on a peg in a roofless room. This room contained some other articles of household besides the dhoti. In front of this room there was another room covered by a roof and then there was a thatched portion of the house in which the accused, his wife and children lived. *Mt. The Broker was discharged though tried jointly with B and examined as prosecution witness.

Held: that under the circumstances B was guilty of abetment of cheating.

In order to prove the offence of cheating (Ss. 415 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code) it is necessary to establish: (1) that some one was deceived (2) fraudulently or dishonestly or intentionally; and (3) by means of such deceit he was induced to change his position either by parting with property or by doing something to his own injury. The cheque was presented for payment on the 18th December, 1922, when it was dishonoured.

Held that although the Petitioner was deceived and thereby induced to take bets on credit from the Opposite Party, the act which the petitioner was induced to do by reason of such deception has not caused or was not likely to cause damage or harm to him in body, mind, reputation or property. It does not follow that if the Petitioner had refused to take bets on credit from the Opposite Party, the latter would of a certainty have had to offer bets by paying cash. In order to prove the offence of cheating (Ss. 415 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code) it is necessary to establish: (1) that some one was deceived (2) fraudulently or dishonestly or intentionally; and (3) by means of such deceit he was induced to change his position either by parting with property or by doing something to his own injury. —Intention at the time of the offence—Damage a necessary consequence—Using false name with object of not fulfilling contract—Remote damage—Effect.

In a case of cheating the intention of the accused at the time of the offence is to be seen and the consequence of the act or omission itself is to be judged. The damage or harm caused or likely to be caused must be the necessary consequence of the act done by reason of the deceit practised or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom, and the law does not take into account remote possibilities that may flow from the act. The proximate and natural result of the act has to be judged and not any vague and contingent injury that may possibly arise.

Where the accused used the name of a bogus or non-existent firm, with the object of not fulfilling the contract in the event of the market going up and as the market did go up he did not supply the goods with the result that the party suffered loss :

Held : such remote consequences must be ignored for the purpose of S. 415.

At the same time, a crossed cheque was given by the judgment-debtor to A. The cheque on presentation on 10th February 1927 was dishonoured and found its way back into the hands of A. On 11th February 1927 a sum of Rs. 350 was paid by the judgment-debtor to A's pleader towards part realization of the decree. The judgment-debtor was prosecuted for the offence of cheating under S. 415, I. P. C. in respect of the dishonoured cheque.

Held : that the judgment-debtor could not be convicted of the offence of cheating because the cheque was not, to the knowledge of the decree-holder, issued in token of the immediate satisfaction of the decree as an accomplished fact but only as a security and as an accommodation to enable the judgment-debtors to provide means for the honouring of the cheque within a convenient period of time after issue or to otherwise satisfy the decree. An attempt to commit an offence punishable under S. 511 though the final act short of actual commission of that offence has not been accomplished.

A informed the Currency Office that he had lost two halves of two currency notes of Rs. 100 during a journey and after getting instructions received in reply to his enquiries, he forwarded to the Currency Office the halves of these two notes still in his possession with the prescribed application forms and affidavits testifying that he was the owner of the notes. The Currency Officer had however already paid the value of these notes to a firm on representation by that firm that the halves of the notes had been stolen from L, one of the partners who was carrying them from Delhi to Ahmedabad. A was prosecuted under S. 511 read with S. 420, Penal Code. The Trying Magistrate, without recording any clear finding as to the dishonest intention of the accused in endeavouring to recover the value of the currency notes, acquitted him on the ground that it was the practice of the Currency Offices not to make payment in such cases until the claimant had executed an indemnity bond, and as no such indemnity bond had been executed by A, his conduct had not amounted to an attempt to cheat but had remained within the stage of preparation for the offence.

Held: that acquittal was bad as the execution of the bond of indemnity was not a portion of the application and was an act which would ordinarily take place before the act of cheating is completed. The applicant would be willing to take the money without an indemnity bond and by his making a false attempt in asking for the money the offence would be just as complete, whether an indemnity bond was or was not insisted upon: 15 All. 173 and 16 Cal. 310, Foll.: 16 All. 409 and 14 P.R. 1914 Cr., Ref.; 8 All. 303 and 45 P.R. 1882 Cr., Dist. In the charge it was recited that F and N obtained the bonds after making false representation to the petition writer and that as a result of the misrepresentation M suffered loss. It was contended that the charge was defective.

Held: that it was not necessary to state in the

The mere fact that the petition writer as a result of the deception of N handed the bond to him was sufficient to bring his conduct within the definition of cheating. Temporary service during leave—Discharge on getting a month's pay in lieu of notice—Rejoining permanent work and getting pay—No inducement and no offence.

The applicant Sarada Saran was a temporary clerk at Lucknow, and took leave from the 23rd January 1923, till the 31st of January of that year. While he was on casual leave he went to Cawnpore, and was appointed a permanent head clerk of the Cawnpore Cantonments by a temporary Cantonment Magistrate. He applied to the Lucknow authorities for an extension of his leave but originally this leave was not granted. His casual leave expired on the 31st January, 1923. On the 2nd of February 1923, he had been informed that he was ineligible under the rules for a permanent appointment. Captain Pocock told the accused that he could not consider his retention in the Cantonment Magistrate's office, whereon the accused informed him that he had resigned his post in the Military Accounts Department, and that it would entail considerable loss to him if he did not retain him. He even offered to accept the position of an apprentice clerk. Captain Pocock could not retain him in his office, and so he paid him a month's pay in lieu of notice amounting to Rs. 145. The accused took the pay in lieu of notice and went back to Lucknow. He then got his leave extended and rejoined on the 5th of February. He again drew his pay at Lucknow, where the accused made it clear that he had already drawn his pay for the month at Cawnpore and he would have to refund one of the two sums.

In order to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate to summon the accused under S. 426, it is essential for complainant to make out a prima facie case in his petition or in his statement on oath of any deterioration having been caused by the accused in the value or utility of the fruits, and unless such a deterioration was made out, there is no offence disclosed under S. 426 for causing mischief.

Where an accused was alleged to have gone with a number of others to a palmyra tope and it was alleged that some of the members in that assembly climbed up the trees and cut the spathes of the palmyra trees and threw down the plots attached to the spathes in which toddy was being collected and the accused was once charged with mischief under S. 427 of the Penal Code and acquitted on the ground that he was not present at the scene of occurrence. Held: he could not subsequently be charged with rioting under S. 147 of the Penal Code on the allegation that he along with the same body of people as on the former occasion went to the tope and that some of them destroyed the spathes in pursuance of the common object, viz., of committing mischief by destroying the spathes and breaking the pots because the two transactions were so closely overlapping that it was open to the prosecution to have framed an alternative charge of mischief and rioting under S. 236. Section 403 is not a section easy of construction but the general principle underlying it is to be borne in mind namely that a man should not be put upon his trial twice over on the same facts as it is a great hardship for a man to stand more than one trial for any one offence. —S. 430—Damage.

—Act done on another's property affecting it injuriously—Proof of actual damage—Necessity.

Every person has a perfect right to do a particular act upon his own land, and if a person breaks open his bund or opens his own sluice, no one can complain of it, until some injurious consequence follows from it. As soon as such a consequence follows, the injury and not the original act, becomes a cause of action. In such a case the mischief would consist, not in breaking the bund, or in opening the sluice but in flooding or withering up the complainant's crops.

But where the property was not of the accused but Government property (kotwah) and the mischief complained of as giving a cause of action to the Crown was the change in the kotwah which diminished its utility and affected it injuriously.

Held: it was not necessary for the Crown to rely on the injury caused to the lands of other persons who were receiving water as giving a cause of action and to prove actual damage resulting therefrom. —Intention to cause wrongful loss.

To constitute an offence punishable under S. 430 it is not sufficient to show that loss has been caused to the complainant but it is necessary to show that the loss was a wrongful loss and the accused had the intention to cause or had knowledge that their act was likely to cause loss to the complainant. —Mere entry with intent to have sexual intercourse with a woman—No offence—Inmates unknown and started at entry—Offence.

A mere entry into a house occupied by another with intent to carry on an intrigue or to have sexual intercourse with a woman living in that house will not in itself be a criminal trespass. In such a case it is supposed that the entry has been with the consent or connivance of the woman living in the house. However if she along with other inmates is in possession of the house, as in the case of a joint Hindu family, the trespass in the house must cause an insult and annoyance to the other members in the house. If the object is to force an intrigue upon a woman in the house and to have a forcible intercourse with her, the intention of the entry will necessarily be to insult and annoy that woman.

Where there was no pre-arrangement between the accused and any lady in the house and all the ladies in the house were startled at the bold attempt on the part of the accused to force himself into the house.

—Guilty intention of the nature described in the section.

The offence of trespass is not complete unless there is an intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy some one in possession of property. It is not enough that the accused should know that his act is likely to have such an effect.

Where an acting taliari with two others learnt that there was in the house of the complainant a pot of toddy in excess of the quantity which one might possess without license and went inside the house brought the toddy pot to the verandah outside and remained there waiting for the arrival of the Revenue Officials.

Held: that though the taliari had no authority to enter into the house, he was not liable for criminal trespass. (Spencer, J.) NARAYANA, In re.

—Intention of the nature described in the section.

Trespass is an offence under S. 441 only if it is committed with one of the intents specified in the section and proof that a trespass committed with some other object known to the accused to be likely or certain to cause insult or annoyance is insufficient to sustain a conviction. Where the servant of a landlord illegally takes possession of tenant's land with the main object of illegally ejecting the tenant an intention to annoy cannot be presumed; at the same time there may be circumstances which may raise a direct inference of an intention to annoy the tenant. 26 A. 194; 41 M. 156; 40 A. 221 Foll. A mere trespasser cannot, by the very act of trespass, immediately and without acquiescence give himself possession against the person whom he ejects, and drive him to produce his title, if he can, without delay reinstate himself in his former possession. The owner may, if he does not acquiesce, re-enter upon the land and reinstate himself provided he does not use more force than is necessary. He must not commit a breach of the peace. His entry will be viewed as a resistance to an intrusion upon a possession which he had never lost. If he takes the risk of a forcible entry and uses more violence than is necessary he will not be able to plead the right of private defence; but he cannot be sued by the trespasser who has entered by force or fraud either for recovery of possession under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, or for ejectment upon the strength of his temporary prior possession. Therefore, possession being still with the owner, he can prosecute the intruder for committing trespass within the meaning of S. 411. (Mullick, Ag. C. J. and Wort, J.) EMPEROR v. BANDEHU SINGH.

—Civil and Criminal trespass—Distinction—Inference of intention—Circumstances of the case.

The essence of the offence for which a man can be convicted under S. 447 of the Indian Penal Code lies in the intent of the accused to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of the property with reference to which the trespass is made. A trespass as an actionable wrong giving rise to a cause of action for a claim in a Civil Court must be distinguished from Criminal trespass and it is only Criminal trespass which is punishable by S. 447 of the Indian Penal Code. There may be an intent to annoy without any primary desire to annoy. A man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts, and if annoyance must inevitably attend his acts, and he does those acts without any reasonable justification he must be held to intend to annoy, even though he has no desire to do so, and his only desire is to obtain some advantage for himself. Whether a man should be presumed to have intended the natural consequences of his acts, when the intention impelling the commission of the act is stated to be one by the prosecution and another by the accused, is a question of inference to be drawn from all the circumstances of the case, and to do that, is the primary duty of the Trial Court. When either of the two explanations of the act of the accused is equally or more or less reasonable the finding must be one of doubt as to the intention of the accused. (*Wazir Hasan, A. J. Owner of cattle rescuing them from cattle-pound, consisting of only a fencing, by opening its door—Nature of offence.

The expression "building" must be regarded as indicating some structure intended for affording some sort of protection to the persons dwelling inside it or for the property placed there for custody. Any structure which does not afford any such protection by itself but merely serves as a fencing or other means of merely preventing ingress or egress cannot make the place a building or a house within the meaning of either of those two sections. Therefore, an owner of a cattle who rescues the cattle from such a cattle-pound by opening its door, does not commit an offence either under S. 380 or S. 454. of identification—Accused seen carrying away bundles on the night in question—No evidence that bundles contained the stolen articles—Evidence if sufficient for conviction.

The accused was charged with an offence under I.P.C., S. 457. The only evidence against him was that he produced certain articles (clothes) which the owner of the shop in which the house-breaking was committed, identified as belonging to him. The articles were incapable of identification and were such as any cloth merchant might stock and sell. One of the P. Ws. deposed that he saw the accused early morning, shortly after the offence was committed, somewhere in the village, carrying away bundles of cloth. It was contended that this evidence coupled with the production of the articles by the accused proved his guilt.

Held: that unless it was established beyond all possible doubt that the bundles contained the goods stolen from the shop in which the offence had been committed or that the articles produced by accused were the stolen property belonging to the owner of the shop, accused could not be convicted. Accused wearing gold ornaments and carrying large sum of his own money at the time of his being caught inside another's house—Accused's explanation corroborated by eye-witness—No evidence of door having been broken open or wall having been punctured—Evidence if sufficient for conviction.

The accused was caught in the house of another. He had with him at the time a large amount which belonged to him and he was wearing his earrings and a gold ring. He was a goldsmith by caste and calling. The story of the accused was that he went to the house to negotiate the acquisition of the widowed daughter-in-law of the proprietor of the house for a relation of his own. This story was corroborated by the statement of a man who was admittedly present at the time. He was also a goldsmith by caste. This man was not mentioned in the first information report. Per Mukerji, J.—If a person gives a note or other security as his own note or security, and the credit thereupon be personal to himself without any relation to another, his signing such a fictitious name may indeed be a cheat but will not amount to forgery, for in that case it is really the instrument of the party whose act it purports to be and the creditor has no other security in view. But that if a note be given in the name of another person either really existing or represented so to be and in that light it obtains a superior credit or induces a trust which will not be given to the party himself, it is then a false instrument and punishable as forgery. We have to judge of the intention at the time when the document was made and it is upon that intention that the criminality of the act has to be judged.

—S. 466—Effect of signing.

—Knowledge of contents—Responsibility—Signature by legal practitioner.

A man who signs his name to a document makes himself thereby in every way as responsible for it as if he was the original drafter of it. If it turns out that the document is one which no man acting honestly could in the circumstances have drafted, then he will be bound to answer for every word, line, sentence and paragraph, and it will not be the least defence that some body else wrote it out and he only signed it. Signature implies association and carries responsibility.

If a legal practitioner puts his signature to a document he will be deemed to have read it and to carry it in his recollection to the extent that an ordinarily competent, careful and reasonable man would carry it and he will be bound by all the implications arising from it just as much as if he had written every word of it with his own hand. Practitioners must realize that if they make, or associate themselves with statements which they know are dishonest and untruthful for the purpose of misleading the Court they must on proof of misconduct bear personal responsibility and that it will be no defence for them to say that it was done in the interests of the client or at his instigation or at the instigation of a colleague at the bar, or that they were so negligent in the matter that they did not read the document or consider it at all. It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that any person or persons were actually deceived by the false document. —Goods manufactured by complainant alone and reputed to be his.

Under S. 478 complainant has to prove that the goods which are the subject of the mark are manufactured and sold by himself and that goods are known in the market as being of his manufacture alone.

Where the article bearing the mark was proved to have been manufactured and sold by both the complainant and the accused on a large scale and there was no sufficient evidence to support the view that the article was reputed to be the complainants' exclusive manufacture: (Greaves and Chotzner, J.J.) GOBINDA CHANDRA v. ABDUL RASHID. A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 235.

—S. 480—Claim to mark.

—If justification for infringement—Test of infringement—Resemblance in mark—Same name.

A trader even with some claim to the mark or name cannot adopt a trade-mark which causes his goods to bear the same name in the market as those of a rival trader. If a purchaser looking at the article offered to him would naturally be led, from the mark impressed on it, to suppose it to be the production of the rival manufacturer, and would purchase it in that belief, the Court considers the use of such a mark to be fraudulent. The actual physical resemblance of the two marks is not to be the sole question for consideration. If the goods of a manufacturer have from the mark or device he has used become known in the market by a particular name, the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market may be as much a violation of the rights of that rival as the actual copy of his device: *Seix v. —S. 480—Ingredients.

—Marking goods in a manner calculated to mislead people—Intention to defraud—If necessary.

In order to establish a case under S. 480 the prosecution must prove that the accused marked goods, that he did so in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked were the manufacture or merchandise of some other person and that such goods are not the manufacture or merchandise of such person. It is unnecessary for the prosecution to prove that an accused in such a case had acted with intent to defraud; should the latter, however, prove that he acted without intent to defraud, he is entitled to be acquitted. (Otter, J.) P. A. PAKIR MOHAMED v. EMPEROR. 1929 Cr. C. 498=A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 322.

—Accused keeping goods of complainant's mark for sale—Accused acting in good faith—Mark not counterfeit—No offence.

Where accused put for sale goods bearing trade mark of complainant but it was found that the manufacturers sent those goods to wrong person from whom the accused got them and no intention to defraud was found:

Held: that no offence was committed under Ss. 480 and 482, nor under S. 486 as the mark was not counterfeit under S. 28, Penal Code. (Chari, J.) SYON SHEEMAN & Co. v. R. SOLOMAN. 95 I.C. 275 = 4 Rang. 16 = 27 Cr. L.J. 755 = A.I.R. 1926 Rang 134.

—S. 482—Burden of proof.

—Absence of intention to defraud—Duty of accused.

On the wording of S. 482 an intent to defraud is an ingredient of the offence, but, when it has been proved that a trade-mark is a false trade-mark, then, it is to be presumed that the accused person had that intent unless and until he rebuts the presumption when the accused person is entitled to an acquittal. The burden of proving the absence of such intent is upon the accused, but the question whether that burden has been discharged must be answered on a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case: A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 322, Diss. from. (Carr, J.) A. M. MALUMIAR & Co. v. FINLAY FLEMING & Co. 118 I.C. 113 = 7 Rang. 169 = 30 Cr. L.J. 882 = 1929 Cr. C. 617 = A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 343.

—Absence of intention to defraud—Duty of accused.

Even though no cases of purchasers having been deceived by the use of false trade-mark are proved, this fact standing alone is insufficient to justify the contention that the accused acted without intent to defraud. The state of mind or the persons responsible for the introduction of the trade-mark is a most relevant fact which can be established by evidence. In the absence of such evidence, the accused cannot be held to have discharged the onus of proving want of intention which was upon him. (Otter, J.) P. A. PAKIR MAHOMAD v. EMPEROR. 1929 Cr. —S. 482—Test for determining infringement.

—Likelihood of deception—Similarity of marks.

The proper test in case of an infringement of a trade-mark is whether the "get-up" of the defendant's goods is likely to deceive a purchaser, who is acquainted with the plaintiff's "get-up" but trusts to his memory. It is to be assumed that the purchaser will look fairly at the goods without distinguishing features being concealed and the Court must also have regard to the class of purchaser by whom the goods would normally be bought: 8 L. B. R. 561, Rel. on.

In a prosecution under S. 482, looking at the two marks together, it could be most emphatically said not only that no person seeing the two side by side would confuse the one with the other, but also that no person, who had seen one of the marks and retained the slightest recollection of what it looked like, could by any possibility mistake the other for it, nor was it suggested that there was anything in the appearance of the two marks to lead to confusion. There was no evidence to show that any person had in fact been deceived and had been led to purchase the goods of the accused believing them to be the merchandise of the complainant. Any prominent and substantial part of the complainant's trade-mark did not appear as a prominent and substantial part of the accused's trade-mark. The evidence though perhaps sufficient to show that some people may call the accused's trade-mark by the same name as that of the complainant, was not sufficient to show that every one would do so nor that the mark of accused must inevitably lead to the attribution to their goods the same name as that of the complainant's.

Held: that the complainants had not made out a good case for protection and the accused must be acquitted: (English Cases, Referred.) (Carr, J.) A. M. MALUMIAR & Co v. FINLAY FLEMING & Co. 118 I.C. 113 = 7 Rang. 169 = 30 Cr. L.J. 882 = 1929 Cr. C. 617 = A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 343.

marriage must be proved strictly and any inference, tacit or otherwise, e. g., a tacit admission on the part of the accused that the woman was the wife of the complainant, will not avail the prosecution if they fail to prove strictly the marriage between the complainant and the woman whose chastity has been violated. In case of this kind it is necessary for the complainant or some other person in his behalf to give strict proof of the marriage. In countries where a system of registration prevails, it is sufficient for the petitioner or the prosecutor, as the case might be, to give evidence of his marriage with the woman who is concerned and produce a certified copy of the register. But in a country like India where no registration prevails, it is necessary to set out the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged ceremony of the marriage in order to enable the Court to determine the question whether the marriage in fact took place and whether the relationship of husband and wife in fact existed at the time of the prosecution. Publication of a defamatory "rumour" is as actionable as if the statement were published without qualification and it is no defence to a civil suit or criminal prosecution that the person who published the libel or slander did not originate it, but heard it or received it from another, nor is it a defence that it was a current rumour and the person publishing it bona fide believed it to be true, and therefore, the editor of a newspaper is as much responsible for a defamatory letter published in his columns as if he had originally penned it. *McPherson v. —Justification.

The defendant in proceedings for defamation, whether in a civil suit or under S. 500, Penal Code, must for defence depend upon the facts of each particular case which the defendant is certain can be proved by him or his witnesses. If there is no substantial defence, an immediate apology in the widest and most unreserved terms may fairly be presumed to decrease the damages and lessen the punishment under S. 500, Penal Code. The facts may be so strong that occasionally it may happen that counsel can advise the client to "justify." That most dangerous plea should never be put forward unless there is a practical certainty of success, and, if no justification can be pleaded, no act shall be done and no question shall be put tending towards justification. —Doctrine of absolute privilege—Applicability.

The English common law doctrine of absolute privilege does not obtain in the moffussil in India. S. 499 is exhaustive and if a defamatory statement does not fall within the specified exceptions it is not privileged. 40 Bom. 162; 40 Cal. 433 and A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 1 (S. —Privilege of advocate.

Under the English Law, advocates have absolute and unqualified privilege in respect of questions asked in cross-examination. Advocates in India have not such unqualified and absolute privilege. (*C. —Privilege of advocate.

Under the Common Law of England an advocate can claim an absolute privilege for words uttered in the course of his duty as an advocate. But an advocate in India is not entitled to an absolute privilege, and in cases of prosecution for defamation his liability must be determined on reference to the provisions of S. 499. —Ss. 499 & 500—Essentials for conviction.*—Proof of language defamatory of the individual.

Per B. B. Ghose, J.—The words complained of as constituting the offence must be set out in the charge and proved before the accused can be convicted. When there is a denial the evidence in support of the prosecution must be scrutinized. When spoken words are alleged to have constituted the offence, a very slight alteration of a word may give quite a different meaning to them.

Per Buckland, J.—The cardinal rule is that the offence consists in using language which others, knowing the circumstances, would reasonably think to be defamatory of the person complaining of and injured by it. —Intention to cause harm to reputation.

A declaration made by a person that he is the printer of a newspaper shall be sufficient evidence (unless the contrary is proved) as against that person that he was the printer of every portion of every issue of the newspaper named in the declaration. In order to escape liability the printer must prove that he was not the printer of any issue of the newspaper which may form the subject-matter of legal proceedings. Absence from the place of printing in good faith, and without knowledge of the seditious articles, would be sufficient evidence to the contrary, but not absence in bad faith. When the declared printer of a

We should not construe the words as we would a document of title according to rules of construction of deeds, specially when the words spoken have not been proved with certainty, and we have to decide not merely whether the words are defamatory but also whether the words refer to the complainant. —Ss. 499 & 500—Fair comment.

—Wilful misrepresentation or misstatement without due enquiry—No fair comment.

There is a distinction between "fair comment" based on well known or admitted facts and the assertion of unsubstantiated facts for comment. Where comment is made on allegations of fact which do not exist, the very foundation of the plea disappears. A wilful misrepresentation of fact or any misstatement which an editor could have discovered to be a misstatement if he had made proper enquiries cannot support the plea of "fair comment" as an editor must make due enquiries as to its truth before disseminating the statement of those facts. Every one has a perfect right to criticise a man's public conduct, to denounce its impolicy and even to denounce its folly or its absurdity or the mischievous consequences which will result from it. —Ss. 499 & 500—Good faith.

—Meaning—Ignorant and timid man preferring complaint to Magistrate—Object being to protect himself, not to injure others—Offence under S. 500, I.P.C., if constituted.

Good faith in the ninth exception to S. 499, I.P.C., requires not logical infallibility but due care and attention. In determining whether due care was taken by the accused allowances have got to be made, his capacity to reason, the circumstances under which he was placed and the occasion which necessitated his making the imputations. Where a comparatively ignorant and timid man apprehending harassment by the complainant presented a petition to a Magistrate and he was prosecuted for allegations contained therein, held, that the accused apparently acted more to protect himself than to injure others and that considering the circumstances under which he acted, the conviction under S. 500 was not sustainable. —Finding by Appellate Court—Interference in revision—Bona fide statement—Prosecution in respect of—Whether opposed to public policy.

Where the Appellate Court found that the plea of good faith was made out so as to render Exceptions 8 and 9 of S. 499, I.P.C., applicable, held, that the High Court will not interfere with that finding in revision. Held also that it is against public policy to prosecute complainants for statements contained in petitions presented in good faith for their protection. (Curgenven, J.) SYED JAFFAR SAHIB v. —Exceptional case.

Exception 10, S. 499, deals with cases, for instance, where one man warns another against employing a third person in his service saying that he is a dishonest person and does not refer to the case where one man says of another that he married a woman who had been married before. (Cuming, J.) HIRAPADO BAIIDYA v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 645.

lifetime of her husband the two met secretly. On the death of Mr. Thomson the two met openly and began to live as husband and wife. One illegitimate child also was born. When the Officer was posted at Quetta she too followed him there. Thereafter S was sent to Moradabad for his training, having been transferred to the Political Department. Then the two were married secretly. The head of the training institution having come to know that S was living with a European lady who was reputed not to be his wife pressed for disclosure of their relationship and the fact of marriage was at last disclosed. Thereupon S was reverted to regular military department. In the meantime the couple was not living a happy life and it was found that the wife had made several attempts either for suicide or for murder of her husband. The couple then went to Delhi where the father of S was living, and then again returned to Moradabad. The father of S then went to Moradabad and interviewed the head of the training institution and also the District Magistrate. During the interview he defamed wife of S firstly by saying that she was of unsound mind and, therefore, likely to murder her husband, and secondly that she was of loose moral character and the word used was a "man-mad". She then complained for defamation. Held, that the first statement though defamatory was covered by Excep. 9 to S. 499 inasmuch as the statement was made in good faith and for the prosecution of his son's interest. While the second statement was not meant to serve any useful purpose and there was no justification for charging the complainant with sexual immorality. It did not, therefore, come within the operation of Excep. 9. (Mukerji and King, JJ.) BHOLA NATH v. EMPEROR.

Criminal law is not meant to punish every insult, however grievous, offered by one person to another in the course of social relations, and, therefore, where a person invites another for a dinner and asks him, when he attended, to leave the place without any sort of imputation, his conduct may be reprehensible from a social point of view, but there is no element of criminality in it. —Reputation, damage to—Corporation—Unlawful preference—Loss—Damage to property rather than to reputation.

A corporation cannot well suffer damage in mind or body. An incorporated company may have a reputation for the good conduct of the business or undertaking of the company and the company's reputation may be quite distinct from that of any of its officers however highly placed. Allotment of excess wagons to one colliery by malpractices of clerks of a railway company causes damage of its reputation but the damage is too remote. The damage is indirect and ulterior rather than the direct natural or probable consequence of the action which the company was deceived into taking. The direct consequence of one colliery getting more than its fair share of wagons is that of getting less than their fair share. If a suit might have been brought against the company for damages for undue preference, such a possibility under S. 415 would come under the head of damage or likelihood of damage to property and not of damage to reputation. It is the practice of the Allahabad High Court in appeal to give little or no weight to the allegations or charges of a defendant or accused if they ought to have been put to the plaintiff or complainant or his witnesses and have not been so put. A plaintiff or complainant has an absolute right to know exactly the allegations or charges upon which the opposite side are going to rely and they must be put to him or to his appropriate witnesses clearly, specifically and with the utmost plainness, so that he may have an opportunity of admitting them wholly or in part, or denying them wholly or in part, and of calling witnesses to rebut such allegations or charges as he denies. As a general rule it is undesirable that people should be hampered in their access to the Courts and in getting justice by the fear that if they are unsuccessful they may be prosecuted for defamation and therefore all Courts should be careful when a complaint of defamation is filed in respect of proceedings in a Civil Court to see whether the provisions of S. 209 and of the Criminal Procedure Code generally have not been evaded. To prove publication of a libel through newspapers it is sufficient to prove that the paper was delivered within the postal area over which the Court had jurisdiction and it need not be proved that the article was read by some particular person. The analogies of letters sent through the post to private persons and no proof tendered at the trial that the addressees had read the contents are not good analogies as newspapers are governed by a different rule. Newspaper is a commodity meant for reading and it should be assumed that it was so read. 15 Bom. 286, Foll. (Mears, C.J. and Kendall, J.) EMPEROR v. JHABBAR MAL.

—Proof of act which had the quality of communicating to third persons.

No doubt, one of the elements of the offence of defamation is that the imputation complained of should be made or published by the accused and the onus of proving it is on the prosecution. In the case of a defamatory libel that element is however sufficiently proved when there is evidence that the accused intentionally did any act which had the quality of communicating to a third person or persons generally the alleged libel. And it is not necessary for the prosecution either to allege or to prove that the act of the accused was directed at communicating the libel to any specified person or persons or that the libel, as a matter of fact, was brought to the notice of such person or persons. Swearing an affidavit containing libel and using it in Court is sufficient publication. (Rupchand Bilaram and Tyabji, A.J.Cs.) BHIKA-CHAND v. EMPEROR. 98 I.C. 124=21 S.L.R. 130= 27 Cr. —Posting of letter—Place of publication—Moral maxim as to ingratitude on letter to complainant—No defamation.

A letter is deemed to be published both where it is posted and where it is received. It is a question of opinion in each case whether a charge of ingratitude is defamation.

Where on an envelope sent by the accused to the complainant there is a strongly worded moral maxim against ingratitude but there is nothing in the writing to connect it with the complainant or to show that any person understood it in a defamatory light, it is not defamation.

Where A sends to the complainant a letter stating that he (A) had received it from the accused but A's covering letter is not produced and A was not examined and there was no other evidence that the accused had sent the letter except the complainant's alleged belief, held that there was no evidence sufficient to —Publishing defamatory matter under guise of rumours—Accused not expressing regret but further aggravating the offence—Severe sentence.

At a time when Hindu-Mahomedan differences were very acute a Mahomedan editor published an article under the guise of rumour containing defamatory matter against the complainant who was of perfectly good character, perfectly good reputation, respected in the town in which he lived, a man of position and a man very closely identified with the activities of the Hindu religion. In the article he was charged with having poisoned his own son and of having done that because the son had wished to become a convert to Islam. On being asked by several persons as to what the publication in the newspaper meant, the complainant wrote a letter to the accused in which he set out forcibly, but quite properly, his feelings of the false and malicious and defamatory attack which had been made upon him and the members of his family. He set out certain conditions upon which he would refrain from seeking his remedy against the accused in the civil and criminal Courts. Thereupon the accused instead of expressing at once by a personal letter and in his paper the utmost regret for its publication wrote a letter aggravating the magnitude of the offence.

Held: that the sentence of six months' simple imprisonment was not in any degree adequate for the offence committed and that a more severe sentence should have been passed. PENAL CODE (1860) Ss. 499 & 500—Sentence.

—Article calculated to stir up communal feelings—Editor a tool in hands of proprietor bearing ill-will towards complainant—Light sentence.

An editor of a newspaper who at a time of intense communal tension first publishes a false and fabricated account of an innocent social function in terms calculated to stir up communal feelings and then maliciously and incorrectly gives out that the false information on which the publication was based, had been supplied by a person who had in fact never done so, cannot be lightly dealt with. But where the editor is a mere tool in the hands of a proprietor who bears ill-will towards the complainant, and the proprietor admits that he wrote the article, lenient view should be taken in awarding punishment, though the mere circumstance that such an editor is not the writer of the article or is a dummy editor is no ground by itself for reduction of the sentence. —Ss. 499 & 500—Statements in suit or proceeding—By Counsel.

—Presumption of instruction and good faith.

It is the duty of a Court, when complaint is made against an advocate for having used defamatory words, to ordinarily presume that the remark or question was made on instructions and in entire good faith. A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 823, Foll. (C. C. Ghose and Gregory, JJ.) NAZIR AHMAD v. JOGESHCANDRA BANERJI. 111 I.C. 569 = 29 Cr. L.J. 889 = 11 A.I. Cr.R. 156 (Cal.).

—Imputation on character of witness—Presumption of instruction.

It is not defamatory to make an imputation on the character and position in life of a witness, provided that the imputation is made in good faith and for the protection of the client who has engaged the advocate. The presumption therefore is that a question asked in cross-examination making an imputation as regards a witness affords no ground ordinarily for a criminal prosecution and that it is the duty of a Court when a complaint is made against an advocate for having used defamatory words that it should ordinarily be presumed that the remark in question objected to was made on instructions and in entire good faith. No doubt there may be circumstances which may show that the question or remark objected to was made wantonly or from malice or from private motive, but the greatest care ought to be taken to enquire into the circumstances and an opportunity should be given to the party accused of such offence to offer explanations before summons is issued. (C. C. Ghose and Commiade, JJ.) M. BANNERJEE v. EMPEROR. 104 I.C. 717 = 55 Cal. 85 = 28 Cr. L.J. 877 = A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 823.

—Questions to witness without good faith.

A pleader must use a certain amount of common-sense and caution in asking a defamatory question. There may be cases where, under proper instructions, he is entitled to ask questions which are defamatory to the person, so as to impeach his credit.

But where the questions were asked with utter recklessness, and without regard to seeing whether there was any truth in them, and with absolute disregard of whether he was entitled to ask them or not and they were asked not for the good of the case but with no other view than publicly to injure the reputation of the witness.

Held: that the questions were asked in absolutely bad faith. (Duval and Roy, JJ.) FAKIR PRASAD

—Privilege—Presumption of good faith.

Utterances calculated to be defamatory by a lawyer in the course of his professional duties and required by his duty to his client are absolutely privileged: 10 Mad. 28 (F. B.) Foll.

When a lawyer acting in the course of professional duties makes a prima facie defamatory statement, good faith is to be presumed and bad faith is not to be assumed unless there is independent allegation or proof of private malice: 19 Bom. 340; 41 Cal. 514; and A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 345, Rel. on.

Even the presence of malice will not override the presumption of good faith where the statement made was obviously necessary in the interests of the client and when the lawyer could not omit to make it without gravely imperilling the interests of his client and would in fact not be discharging his duty to his client unless he made it.

Where the pleader defending an accused against a charge of making a defamatory statement against the complainant that the latter had infected his wife with venereal disease, made an oral statement in arguments that the defamatory statement was in substance true and had been set out as a fact in a reported judgment of the High Court and put the same statement in the written notes of arguments and thereupon a complaint of defamation was preferred against the pleader.

Held: that as the publication complained of was imperatively necessary for the conduct of the cases in which the pleader was appearing professionally, the statements were made in good faith and could not be made the subject of a charge of defamation. (Wallace, J.) ANWARUDDIN v. FATHIM BAI ABIDIN.

28 Cr. L.J. 313 = A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 379 = 52 M.L.J. 269.

—Privilege—Duty of prosecution to prove malice.

The liability of a pleader charged with defamation in respect of words spoken or written in the performance of his professional duty depends on S. 499 and the Court would presume good faith unless there is cogent proof to the contrary. The privilege is not absolute but qualified, and the burden is cast upon the prosecution to prove absence of good faith.

Where express malice is absent the Court, having due regard to public policy, would be extremely cautious before it deprives the Advocate of the protection of Exception 9. The Court ought to presume his good faith and not hold him criminally liable unless there is satisfactory evidence of actual malice and unless there is cogent proof that unfair advantage was taken of his position as pleader for an indirect purpose. 19 Bom. 340, Foll. (Ross and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.) NIRSU NARAYAN SINHA v. EMPEROR. 97 I.C. 354 =

—Qualified privilege—Presumption of good faith—Proof of malicious or improper motive.

Section 499 of the Penal Code is meant to be universal in its application. The English Law of absolute privilege does not apply in India to statements of advocates in judicial proceedings. But a counsel's position is one of the utmost difficulty. He is not to speak of that which he knows; he is not called upon to consider whether the acts with which he is dealing are true or false. What he has to do is to argue as best as he can without degrading himself in order to maintain the proposition which shall carry with it either the protection or the remedy which he desires for his client. If amidst the difficulties of his position he were to be called upon during the heat of his argument to consider whether what he says is relevant or irrelevant, he would have his mind so embarrassed that he could not do the duty which he is called upon to perform; [Munster v. Lamb, L.R. 11 Q.B.D. 588, Foll.] Therefore when a pleader is charged with defamation in respect of words spoken or written while performing his duty as a pleader, the Court ought to presume good faith and not hold him criminally liable unless there is satisfactory evidence of actual malice and unless there is cogent proof that unfair advantage was taken of his position as pleader for an indirect purpose. To rebut the presumption in the pleader's favour it is not sufficient merely to allege that the client knew the imputation to be untrue for the duty of the pleader is to present his client's case. So far, at any rate, as the purposes of a prosecution for defamation are concerned, it would be wholly unreasonable to say that it is the duty of the pleader to enquire whether his client's case is true or false. To rebut the presumption of good faith in such a case there must be convincing evidence that the pleader was actuated by a malicious or an improper motive personal to himself and not by a desire to protect or further the interests of his client in the cause; [11 Beng. L.R. 321 (P.C.), Dist.; 9 Bom. L.R. 1287 and 36 Cal. 375, Foll.] It is the duty, therefore, of a Court when a complaint is made against an advocate or legal practitioner for defamation that it should presume that the remark was made on instructions and in good faith; and unless circumstances clearly show that it was made wantonly, or from malicious or private motives, the complaint should not be entertained. Even if the circumstances suggest recklessness or malice, further enquiry should be made and an opportunity, if possible, should be given to a legal practitioner to offer an explanation before summons is issued. In matter of a case under S. 500 when it is said to rest upon allegation made in petition to a Court, in determining whether due care was taken by the accused allowances should be made for the intelligence of the accused, his capacity to reason, the circumstances under which he was placed, and the occasion which necessitated his making the imputation. When the facts seem to show that the accused being a comparatively ignorant and timid man apprehending harassment by the complainant did what a man of superior intelligence and knowledge could not have done, namely presented a petition, there can be little doubt that he acted with a desire to protect himself by an appeal to the Magistrate rather than to injure others and he should not be convicted : 31 Bom. 293; 12 Bom. 377 and A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 470, Ref. —Defamation of police force as a whole—Right of individual to complain.

Per B. B. Ghose, J. contra Newbould, J.—The words "the British Government themselves, and the superior officers, including from the District Magistrate down to the daroga and chowkidars were all beasts, etc." are too wide to admit of the construction that any particular police officer was defamed.

Per Buckland, J.—Excep. 2 to S. 499, I.P.C., is intended to include a company or an association or collection of persons as such within the word "person" as used in the definition, so that the latter should not be limited to individuals. It is doubtful if the police force at a particular place is an association or collection of persons as is contemplated in Excep. 2 S. 499. The police force as such cannot complain of any imputation as regards its personal reputation. The true rule appears to be that if a person complains that he has been defamed as a member of a class he must satisfy the Court that the imputation is against him personally and he is the person aimed at, before he can maintain a prosecution for defamation. Attempt is an act done in part execution of a criminal design, amounting to more than mere preparation, but falling short of actual consummation, and possessing, except for failure to consummate, all the elements of the substantive crime; in other words, an attempt consists in the intent to commit a crime, combined with the doing of some act adapted to, but falling short of its actual commission; it may consequently be defined as that which if not prevented would have resulted in the full consummation of the act attempted.

—A asking Currency Office for payment for two halves of two currency notes—Currency Office making payment already to L—Non-execution of an indemnity bond by A—A prosecuted under Ss. 511 and 420—Offence.

An attempt to commit an offence is punishable under S. 511 though the final act short of actual commission of that offence has not been accomplished.

A informed the Currency Office that he had lost two halves of two currency notes of Rs. 100 during a journey and after getting instructions received in reply to his enquiries, he forwarded to the Currency Office the halves of these two notes still in his possession with the prescribed application forms and affidavits testifying that he was the owner of the notes. The Currency Officer had however already paid the value of these notes to a firm on representation by that firm that the halves of the notes had been stolen from L, one of the partners who was carrying them from Delhi to Ahmedabad. A was prosecuted under S. 511 read with S. 420, Penal Code. The trying Magistrate, without recording any clear finding as to the dishonest intention of the accused in endeavouring to recover the value of the currency notes, acquitted him on the ground that it was the practice of the Currency Offices not to make payment in such cases until the claimant had executed an indemnity bond, and as no such indemnity bond had been executed by A, his conduct had not amounted to an attempt to cheat but had remained within the stage of preparation for the offence.

Held: that acquittal was bad as the execution of the bond of indemnity was not a portion of the application and was an act which would ordinarily take place before the act of cheating is completed. The applicant would be willing to take the money without an indemnity bond and by his making a false attempt in asking for the money the offence would be just as complete whether an indemnity bond was or was not insisted upon. 15 All. 173 and 16 Cal. 310. Foll.: 16 All. 409.

The accused went to the officer who had the custody of signature slips. He did not give out his name but produced a certain piece of paper which bore a certain number. The officer looked at that number, then looked at the electoral roll and discovered that against that number the name of one L appeared. On being asked by that officer if he was L, the applicant said he was. A patwari of the village was there and he said that the applicant was not L but was one M. There was a dispute and ultimately the applicant admitted that he was M and not L.

Held, that the obtaining of the "signature slip" was an act which by itself would not have amounted to an application for a voting paper. (Mukerji, J.) MALKHAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. 84 I.C. 711=22 A.L.J. 1102=26 Cr. L.J. 359=6 L.R. A.Gr. 20=A.I.R. 1925 All. 226.

general implication. The applications for settlement made by the proprietors at the time of Permanent Settlement were, as a rule, a counterpart of the actual settlement made and were part of a single transaction completed at the same time, just as a kabuliya is a counterpart of a patta. The Income-tax Act, if and in so far as it charges income derived from property included in the original settlement with the proprietor and assessed to revenue, varies the terms of Reg. I of 1793. The Income-tax Act of 1922 is not explicit enough in its terms to repeal the exemption created by the Permanent Settlement Regulation; for such repeal cannot be effected merely by words of general import or by implication. By the Permanent Settlement it was the revenue or rent payable to Government as the paramount landlord that was fixed in perpetuity. The effect of the imposition of income-tax on the profits arising out of jalkar, hat, and ghatlag is in fact to increase the revenue under another name. The jama permanently fixed at the date of the settlement was calculated on a percentage of the rents and profits at that time derived from the ownership of the land. Income-tax is based upon the same rent and profits as they now exist and it is impossible to escape from the conclusion that a tax under whatever name upon the same sources of income would increase the duty payable under the name of revenue and which by the Permanent Settlement it was agreed should then be fixed for ever. PERMANENT SETTLEMENT REGULATION

—General taxes on estates.

—Liability to income-tax.

C. C. Ghose, J.—Buckland and Panton, JJ. concurring. The clear purport of the declaration made in Regulation I of 1793 is that the re-assessment of the estates dealt with therein was for ever barred. In other words, the land assessment then formed was to be considered the permanent and unalterable revenue of the territorial possessions of the East India Company in Bengal so that no discretion might be exercised by the Company's servants in any case of introducing alteration whatsoever. The Regulation of 1793 was so framed as to operate as an ample and complete guarantee that no resettlement of the estates referred to therein should ever take effect. But no guarantee was ever given that the proprietors of those estates should never, at any time, be called upon to aid in the relief of the future necessities of the Government of the land and there was no promise or engagement of any description whatsoever by which the Government of the day surrendered their right to levy a 'general' tax upon incomes of all persons irrespective of the fact whether they are zamindars with whom the Permanent Settlement was concluded or not. A 'general' tax is no doubt a public demand but it is one which is levied upon a wholly different principle and in respect of a wholly different kind of liability; such a 'public demand' is no doubt a demand made upon zamindars with whom the Permanent Settlement was concluded, but it is made upon them in company with other classes of the community and with no exclusive reference to the source from which their incomes are derived.

Cr. D—140

PETROLEUM ACT (1899), Ss. 5, 11 & 15—Transport licence.

The public assessment could be augmented in any way, so long as the method adopted did not mean to take away a portion of this income or profits qua such income or profits. Although by the Permanent Settlement right to taxation generally was not given up the income or profits derivable from the lands was not to be taxed as such. Whether a portion is taken as revenue and another under the head of income-tax, both are demands of the State, and when in assessing the revenue, a guarantee was given of its fixity and a declaration was made that the balance will not be altered at any time, to impose a further tax on the income or profits does away with that fixity and alters that which was guaranteed to be unalterable. The object of the Settlement in exempting from further burden income which has already paid toll to the State in the shape of land revenue was primarily to protect and improve agriculture, as that then was the chief source of income, and the exemption of agricultural income from the operation of the Income-tax Act perhaps indicates a continuity of policy on the part of the legislature in that respect. The words of the Settlement, however, are clear enough as indicating an intention to leave untouched for all times to come the surplus that the landholder will be able to derive as income or profits from the lands of his estate. —S. 29—Interpretation.

—Violation of duty.

Section 29 is to be construed quite widely. The words "rules and regulations" refer to such rules and regulations as are properly framed by competent authorities, that is to say, by the Inspector General. So also the words "lawful order" refer to any order which any officer may lawfully give to any individual or specific body of individuals under his command. Offences under S. 29 are not limited to the wilful breaches or neglect of a rule or regulation or a lawful order but include any "violation of duty" 21 Cr. L.J. 465, Rel. on. (*Courtney Terrell, C. —Intentional acts.

Section 29 really is intended to punish intentional or wilful acts of the police officers as described therein and the expression "withdrawal from duty" imports intentional refusal or cessation to perform one's duty.

A police constable who had gone to another station to escort an offender, delayed his departure from that station for two days. No order was given to him for the date of his return. There was some evidence to show that under similar circumstances police officers had been given two days' halt.

Where a person took out a license for a procession to proceed through Patna city, one of the conditions of which was that no member of it was to carry a lathi or a sword:

Held: that the object of a license under the Police Act is to ensure the preservation of public order and clearly the licensee must undertake the duty of maintaining order throughout the course of the procession and, therefore, the licensee was responsible for seeing that no member carrying a lathi joined the procession on the way though at the start it had no such member.

The fact that S. 30-A, Police Act, gives the power to the officers mentioned to stop a licensed procession which violates the conditions of the license does not excuse a licensee from strictly complying with the conditions of his license. (Mullick, Ag. C. J. and Wort, J.)

POST OFFICE ACT (VI of 1898).*—S. 3—Charge and conviction.

—Discovery of postal article outside Post Office
—Finder giving it back to Postmaster—In course of transmission.

M, a servant of K, having discovered a number of letters lying in a khola opposite a post office, handed them over to his master. One of the letters was addressed to P and K took it to the addressee who stated that the letter had never been delivered to him. The matter was reported to the Postmaster F who took possession of the letters saying that he would take necessary action in the matter. No action being taken by F, the matter was reported to the Postmaster-General with the result that F was sent up for trial. The Magistrate framed two alternate charges against him, first under S. 52, Post Office Act and the other under S. 201, Penal Code. The Magistrate found F guilty only under S. 201. It was contended that the charge framed by the Magistrate was defective and prejudiced the accused, the alternate charge was illegal and contravened the provisions of S. 236, Cr. P. Code.

Held, that the first charge was not defective, as the postal articles in question were "in course of transmission by post" according to S. 3, Post Office Act, when they were made over to F by K and, therefore, the mere fact that the letters had been posted when F was not the Postmaster of the Post Office was immaterial. The framing of the charge in the alternative under S. 201 did not contravene S. 236, Cr. P. Code. (Broadway, J.) EMPEROR v. FAIZUL HASSAN. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 460.

—S. 52—Misappropriation.

—Postmaster opening a V. P. article addressed to himself without paying for it and making false entries in the P. O. books.

A branch postmaster who was also a shop-keeper ordered a consignment of flour in order to meet the requirements of his shop and a value-payable envelope containing the railway receipt for the flour arrived at the branch post office. The postmaster opened it, extracted the railway receipt, went down the station where the goods had by that time arrived, and took delivery. After six days he paid the price of the goods into the post office. In the meantime he made in the books of the post office entries and repeated daily "on account of the absence of the addressee."

Held, that, although the offence was a technical one in the sense that no loss was incurred by the post office and the money involved was voluntarily returned, it amounted to criminal misappropriation within the meaning of S. 403, Penal Code, and the postmaster was guilty under S. 52, Post Office Act. 39 P.L.R. 1902, Dist. PRACTICE.*—Appellate Court—Interference with finding.

—Conjectural grounds.

Per Simpson, A. J. C.—It would not be right for an appellate Court to set aside the decision of the Court of trial on conjectural grounds of what might have happened in the face of the sworn testimony of what actually did happen.

Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.—Questions of fact may be decided by the trial Court on two different lines altogether. One line may be the drawing of inferences from proved and admitted facts and a finding of fact on the other line may be founded upon credibility of witnesses alone. In the former case the Court of appeal is in as good a situation as the trial Court. The latter case may give rise to two positions: (1), Where the credibility of witnesses is based on their demeanour in the witness box and impression which that demeanour creates on the mind of the Judge who sees and hears the witnesses. In such a case the finding of fact arrived at by the trial Court should not be lightly disregarded. On the other hand considerable weight should be attached to it, but the finding is not binding. The second position arises where the judgment of the trial Court is not founded on the demeanour of the witnesses and the impressions derived therefrom. In such a case the Court of appeal is free to come to its own conclusions as to the credibility of a particular witness. It is an unjust ridicule to characterize probabilities and presumptions of facts as conjectures. If probabilities and natural presumptions were ruled out of order the jurisdiction of Courts would be reduced to a wooden constitution. (*Wazir Hasan, J. C., Simpson and Ashworth, A. J. —Discretion.

—It is mistake for superior tribunal to lay rules as to exercise of such discretion.

When a tribunal is invested by statute with a discretion without any indication of the grounds upon which the discretion is to be exercised, it is a mistake for a superior tribunal to lay down any rules with a view to indicating the particular grooves in which the discretion should run. An Appellate Court should be very slow to interfere with the discretion of a trial Court if not exercised in a perverse or arbitrary manner: 26 All. 238 (P.C.) and 42 Bom. 380 P.C., Rel. on.

Where the trial Court feared that the recasting of the charges would embarrass the Jury and possibly prejudice the accused in his trial,

—Conspiracy case.

In cases of conspiracies it is difficult for the prosecution to secure outside and independent evidence. The prosecution has to depend upon evidence of people who are engaged in detecting crimes of this sort. In a case like this therefore the evidence of such persons should be scrutinized and received with a great deal of caution. (Suhrawardy and Panton, JJ.) NIRMAL CHANDRA DE v. EMPEROR.

—Judge.*—Holding Court beyond office hours.

For practical purposes it is quite improper for a Judge to insist on sitting beyond the prescribed hours unless, of course, the lawyers in the case agree. The lawyers are professional men who have to regulate their interviews in accordance with the regular and prescribed hours of the Court's sittings and it is not reasonable except for really unavoidable necessity or for the agreed convenience of all concerned that a Court should insist on sitting at times neither prescribed nor suitable. The executant sued in a Civil Court for a declaration that the deed was a forgery and moved the High Court for stay of the criminal proceedings. Held: that as the issue in both the proceedings civil and criminal was the same and as there was no likelihood of the evidence becoming stale or unobtainable, the High Court would be justified in ordering the stay of the criminal proceedings and in such a case the High Court can direct the lower Court to expedite the disposal of the civil suit. ### —Criminal cases—Interference.

—Privy Council is not a Court of Criminal Appeal—Mere mistake in exercise of jurisdiction is not enough to sustain appeal but justice must have been set at naught.

The power of the Privy Council to entertain appeals arises not from the relation of the Board to the Court below, as a Court of criminal appeal, but as the Privy Council advising the Sovereign with regard to the exercise of the prerogative. The prerogative is that remnant of the power of the Crown which remains to the Crown to interfere with tribunals of justice. With India's march to self-government, this prerogative has been diminishing. Therefore, unless it can be proved that there was no proper trial at all, that the forms of all judicial procedure were disregarded, not merely according to local ordinances but according to the unvarying character, which is common to all, the Privy Council cannot interfere. If there is anything very very gross, it might come under the same category, but even then, the Crown has to be extraordinarily cautious in asserting, the survivor even of that very restricted prerogative which existed fifty years ago, but which may not exist now. The Privy Council cannot take cognizance of a mere mistake which the Court in India has made in the exercise of its jurisdiction. Where justice has not been set at Governor-General has the power to order that the trial be held elsewhere if he thinks that in the state of public feeling a fair trial could not be obtained in the place where the offence would ordinarily be tried. To ask the Board to declare that a refusal of the Governor-General, who had all the advantages of being in the country and of judging of the real state of the feeling of the public amounted to a violation of the principles of natural justice, is nothing less than preposterous. The impropriety and uselessness of such a demand cannot be too strongly qualified.

—Special Leave to appeal—Criminal Cases.

—Leave to appeal in criminal cases is granted only when there is grave and substantial injustice due to non-observance of some forms of legal process or violation of principles of natural justice.

It is indisputable that as His Majesty the King is supreme over all persons and Courts within his Dominions, a right of appeal in all cases civil and criminal to the King in Council exists, from the highest Court of each separate colony, province, state or possession, whether it be a Court of record or not, except so far as the prerogative in this behalf has been expressly surrendered. Criminal proceedings, however, are, in practice, reviewed only if it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done. The Judicial Committee do not, as a rule, advise His Majesty to grant appeals in criminal cases, except where questions of great and general importance, likely to occur often, are raised, and where the due and orderly administration of the law is shown to be interrupted, or diverted into a new course which might create a precedent for the future, and where there are no other means of preventing these consequences. Such appeals lie either by the right of grant, in pursuance of leave obtained by the appellant from the Court appealed from, or by reason of special leave granted by the Judicial Committee. The latter appeals arise either where the Court below does not possess power to grant leave to appeal or where leave to appeal has been refused by the Court below, or where the leave to appeal was granted on some special point and the appellant wishes to raise points not included in the leave to appeal. But whether leave is granted by the Court appealed from or by the Judicial Committee, it is plain that the answer to the question, whether the case is a fit one for appeal, must depend on the same considerations. The grant of the leave to appeal is a step ancillary to the determination of the appeal, and the principles which regulate the ultimate decision of the appeal cannot obviously be ignored when an application for leave is examined. There must be something which, deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial and the protection of the law, or which, in general, tends to divert the due and orderly administration of the law into a new course, which may be drawn into an evil precedent in future. Where there is no provision like Clause 41 of the Letters Patent, 1865, applicable, no Indian Court can grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. In such cases, the remedy is by an application for special leave to His Majesty in Council. Execution of sentence was stayed pending the hearing of appeal to His Majesty in Council, (1908 App. Cas. 448, F.) (Mookerjee and Chatterjee, JJ.) BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE v. The word "place" is used in S. 13 in conjunction with street and thoroughfare and could not have been intended to apply to a private place which might be open to a public view. Of course a particular place though private may become a public place on a particular occasion, for instance, when the members of the public are really present there. But unless such is the case, a private place cannot be called a public place merely because if some member of the public were to pass close by he might have an opportunity of seeing what was going on there. It must be a place either open to the public, or actually used by the public, the mere publicity of the situation not being sufficient. 17 All. 166, Rel. on; (1904) A. W. —S. 61—Joint possession of house.

Articles found in house—All inmates having access—Presumption of possession—Illicit liquor found in son's room—Presumption of his guilt does not arise.

Where articles are found in a house in such place or places as several persons living in the house may have access to, there is no presumption as to possession and control of any other person than the house-master, though it is open to the prosecution to prove that the possession was with some other member of the family. 15 All. 129 and A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 272, Foll.

When most of illicit liquor is found in the room occupied for the night by the son and his family for sleeping, it does not necessarily mean that the son was in the exclusive possession of the room. The legal possession still remains with the father, the house-master, and there is obvious possibility that the liquor could have been placed there by the father. The mere fact that the son does not report the matter to proper authorities but uses the room along with his wife and family to sleep in does not make him guilty of the offence of being in possession of that liquor. Clause (a) of S. 197, as amended by the Municipal Act of 1923, does not authorize a Municipal Committee to frame a bye-law prohibiting the sale by auction of fresh fruits and vegetables at any place other than a particular place. —S. 101—Omission to set points.

Under R. 12 of the rules framed under the Railways Act, it was the duty of the accused, who was a station master when he knew that a train was approaching the station to send the passed porter to the facing points with instruction for him to set and lock the points for the line on which the train was to come. The station master neglected to send the porter to the points. The signals were down to allow the train to pass into the station. But under the rules the engine driver should have stopped the train when he found that there was no porter at the points signalling him to pass on. The points were not properly locked and the consequence was that some of the carriages of the train were derailed. No person was hurt but the derailment of part of the train caused danger to persons travelling therein.

Held, that it was not quite clear whether the engine driver could have avoided the derailment by stopping the train in time because the signals were in his favour. But if the station master had complied with the rules and had sent the passed porter out to the points to properly set and lock them, no accident would have occurred. Hence, the disregard by the accused of R. 12 enhanced the danger to the persons travelling in the train and therefore the accused was liable. (Scott-Smith, J.) BISHAN SARUP v. —The duty of a person in control of a railway station is first to give the fundamental orders regulating the arrival of a train and secondly to see that they are accurately carried out. Where such an order was given to set the points to the loop but the slides showed main the failure to act upon a defect in the working of the machinery is an act of grave negligence. —S. 108—Test.

The risk of danger, of loss and of discomfort to the other passengers on a train by stopping the train by pulling the communication cord is one element that has to be considered for the purpose of deciding whether there was reasonable and sufficient cause to stop the train by pulling the communication cord. But this must be considered in relation to the risk arising from the circumstances to the person pulling the cord. In other words if the risk to the passenger pulling the cord is incommensurate with the risk and discomfort, etc., to the other passengers, he cannot be said to have had just and reasonable cause. But where the risk to the passenger is very great as compared to the risk to the other passengers, he must be said to have just cause for pulling the cord.

Another element of great importance is whether the necessity or occasion for pulling the cord has arisen from the fault of the railway administration.

The third element to be considered is the importance of the line and train. (Ashworth, J.) ASHRAFI LAL v. EMPEROR. 105 I.C. 679=8 L.R.A. Cr. 132=8 A.I. Cr.R. 290=25 A.L.J. 975=28 Cr.L.J. 967=A.I.R. 1927 All. 647.

The most important words in S. 122 are the words "unlawfully enters", for unless and until a person has made an unlawful entry upon the railway premises he cannot be brought within this penal provision. The word "unlawful" means "contrary to the law laid down in the statute."

If the railway made a general rule under the Act (by virtue of S. 47 (1) of the Act) that nobody should enter upon railway platforms except passengers with tickets, any other persons entering upon the platform might be guilty of unlawful entry. But where no such rule exists, and where the Station Master leaves the platform gate open, those who enter upon the platform can hardly be considered to be other than licensees. A person who enters in this manner may be quite lawfully ordered to leave the railway premises, but as he has not entered unlawfully he can never be brought within the mischief of S. 122 of the Railways Act. The sending of first youthful offenders, whose antecedents are not shown to be bad, to ordinary jails has the effect of making them hardened criminals after they are discharged from such jails. Abetment of offence under Salt Act—Punishment prescribed under S. 9—Punishment under Penal Code, S. 117, is illegal.

The punishment under Penal Code, S. 117, for abetment of an act which is an offence under Salt Act (1882) and not an offence under Penal Code, is illegal for the reason that Salt Act, S. 9, prescribes specific punishment for the abetment of such an offence. It is illegal to proceed under S. 117, I. P. C., which allows a higher punishment for abetment of an offence for the punishment of which a lighter and separate penalty is provided by the provisions of S. 9, Salt Act (1882). (*Wazir Hasan, C. —When Court can take disciplinary action, without a conviction by the criminal court.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—Where the accusations against a pleader are of a criminal nature, it is not in every case that criminal conviction is a sine qua non to the exercise of the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court. A broad distinction has to be drawn between the acts done by the pleader in his professional capacity or in the presence of the Court, and acts not done in such capacity and not in the presence of the Court. It is only in the latter case when the acts charged are indictable and are fairly denied that the Court will not proceed against the pleader in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction, until he has been convicted and will not compel him to answer on oath to a charge for which he may be indicted: 47 Cal. 1115 and other cases relied on: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 502 and A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 536, Ref. —Is professional misbehaviour because that will be considered disgraceful and dishonourable by pleaders of repute and competency.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—Professional conduct of a pleader must be judged by the rules and standard of his profession and if a pleader has done something which would be reasonably regarded as disgraceful and dishonourable by pleaders of good reputation and competency he is guilty of professional misconduct. Further a pleader becomes more disgraceful and calls for a more severe punishment, when he is guilty not only of an unwritten rule of professional conduct, but where such rule has been enacted and laid down by the Rules of Association to which he has the honour to belong and where one of the conditions on which he has obtained his license to practice as a pleader is that he shall undertake to submit to such written rules of conduct.

Applying this test the failure by a pleader to keep a fee-book or a ledger containing the account of client's money for a number of years which is a breach of Rr. 35 and 36 of the Rules of the Karachi Bar Association is an act of professional misbehaviour because that would be considered disgraceful and dishonourable by pleaders of good repute and competency: Ex parte Law Society In re, A Solicitor,

In each of the deeds two of the brothers disclaimed all interest in certain properties in favour of their third brother. The deeds were presented for registration, each bearing a stamp of Rs. 5. The Sub-Registrar admitted them to registration, but subsequently he reported the matter being of opinion that higher stamp duty was chargeable because "the effect of the documents was to make the partition among three brothers." The three brothers were prosecuted. Two of them approached the Deputy Commissioner, paid the deficit duty and penalty and the case against them was withdrawn. The case against R proceeded. He was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000.

STAMP ACT (1899), S. 64—Scope.

On appeal the order was set aside on the ground that the case was not properly instituted without a complaint. It was suggested that the Collector might give an opportunity to the accused of showing that his intention was not fraudulent. The Collector, however, thought that there was a deliberate attempt to defraud the revenue and sanctioned the prosecution. Accordingly, the District Sub-Registrar lodged a complaint.

Held, that as there was no evidence that accused R had the intention of evading the payment of property duty, or he executed the documents with intent to defraud the Government, he would not be convicted under S. 64. (Jwala Prasad, J.) RANG LAL SAHU v. EMPEROR. 108 I.C. 427=29 Cr. L.J. 337=

tion of the Governor-General in Council lodged a complaint in the Court of a Magistrate having two jurisdictions, that of a Headquarters Magistrate and that of a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction over railway lands in Bhopal State. The complaint was against the editor, printer and publisher of an Urdu Weekly 'Riyasat' for publishing an article tending to excite disaffection towards the Chief of Bhopal State or his government or administration in Bhopal. The Magistrate was subordinate to different High Courts in two different jurisdictions. The complainant applied for amplification of his complaint by the inclusion of Itarsi as one of the places of publication of the above offending article. The Magistrate passed the following order: "The result of this petition for amplification will be that the case will henceforward cease to be a railway case for State administered areas if it was one and be transferred to my ordinary file of criminal cases of this Court. This be done." After this order the accused objected that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear the case as he had transferred a case from a Court subordinate to one High Court to another Court Subordinate to the other High Court, which the Governor-General in Council could alone do by a notification in the Gazette of India.

Held, that the trying Magistrate in his capacity as the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was incompetent to deal with the complaint of an offence committed at Itarsi but in his capacity as Headquarters Magistrate was competent to do so.

Held further, that as the original papers filed by the complainant contained material clearly amounting to an allegation of publication at Itarsi, the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was no longer bound to dismiss the complaint in its entirety: he was entitled to return the complaint for presentation to the Court that could try the offence committed at Itarsi and this was in effect what he did. Where the negligence of the plaintiff or that of the defendant is the sole cause of the accident the matter is free from doubt. But difficulty may arise where accident is caused partly by negligence of the plaintiff and partly by that of the defendant. In such circumstances it becomes duty of the Court to endeavour to ascertain whether the negligent act or omission of the plaintiff, or that of the defendant, was the cause of the accident. If the Court finds itself unable to discover to what extent the negligence of the plaintiff or that of the defendant contributed to bring about the accident, the defendant is entitled to succeed for in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis. On the other hand, though the plaintiff may have been guilty of negligence and although that negligence may in fact have contributed to the accident, yet if the defendant could in the result by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence have avoided the mischief which happened, the plaintiff's negligence will not excuse him. In like manner although there may have been negligence on the part of the plaintiff, yet unless he might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the consequences of the defendant's negligence he is

Where in a small common house occupied by two brothers belonging to a joint Hindu family, and running a common business, there are discovered not only an enormous quantity of cocaine but all the necessary weighing machines and packing material to deal with it, it is idle to suggest that both brothers would not know of the dealings in cocaine. The ownership of the house, under S. 60 (a), is not an essential element, but the nature of the occupation of the house might and often is a circumstance of very great importance in estimating whether the particular accused in any given case possesses the excisable article. Three men, two of whom were brothers and the third their cousin, were in actual occupation of a house in which, on search, the police discovered packets of cocaine. They were carrying on the same business and set up the same defence.

—Under Prevention of Adulteration Act—Power to sanction.

In view of S. 50 (e) it makes no difference to the legality of the sanction that the Board expressed itself against prosecution. In such a case, the Chairman is the Board and his act binds the Board. The policy of the Municipalities Act is to enable certain functions of the Board to be exercised by the Chairman so as to avoid the delay necessitated by reference of the matter to the Board. S. 12, Prevention of Adulteration Act (U.P. Act VI of 1912), which is general provision as to sanctions of prosecution for adulteration, cannot control S. 50 (e), Municipalities Act, for two reasons. One is that a general enactment cannot affect a special one; and the other reason is that the latter Act was passed later than the former one. (Ashworth, J.)

—S. 307—Reasonableness of order of Board.

—There is no appeal under the Act against a notice issued by the sanitary authority under S. 267. The Magistrate who has to deal with a question of breach is not entitled to consider the reasonableness of the order. "Question" in section 321 means "called in question as regards its reasonableness or practicability." It cannot mean in the context in which it is used, "challenging its legality". The scheme of the Act is clear that, except as provided in the case of specified orders which may be appealed to the District Magistrate, no order or direction or requirement made by a municipality, or a committee of a notified area can be questioned on the merits, provided that it is a requirement or an order or a direction made within the powers conferred upon the authority, but its legality can undoubtedly be questioned in any Court in which penal proceedings are brought for breach of the order, if it can be shown that it is an order, requirement or direction which the Board could not make, i.e., an order made outside its jurisdiction. 33 All. 147, Dist. ## —S. 12—Sanctioning prosecution.

—In view of S. 50 (e) it makes no difference to the legality of the sanction that the Board expressed itself against prosecution. In such a case the Chairman is the Board and his act binds the Board. S. 12, Prevention of Adulteration Act (U. P. Act VI of 1912), which is a general provision as to sanctions of the prosecution for adulteration, cannot control S. 50 (e), Municipalities Act, for two reasons. WORDS AND PHRASES.—Accident.—"Accident."

Rule 27 (c) under Motor Vehicles Act (1914), S. 11, which provides that the driver of the motor vehicle shall promptly report all occurrences of accidents to the nearest police station is intended to apply only to accidents happening to the car which one is driving and which results in some injury, annoyance or danger to the public or of danger or injury to public property or obstruction to traffic and so understood it is not ultra vires. The petitioner was driving his car when on the way the car went out of control and jumped over a culvert, the parapet of which was only nine inches high, and fell into a channel. As a result of the accident, the front axle of the car was bent and some chunam was knocked off on the eastern side of the culvert. Those who were in the car received slight injuries; but they were able to return to their homes in the same car.

Held, that the incident is not an accident within the meaning of the rule.

Reilly, J.—An accident which makes the control of the vehicle impossible in the usual way or more difficult than usual, may be a source of danger to other users of the road and a rule requiring the driver to report such an accident would be within the rule making power under the Act. —A person who plays a musical instrument in a band is not an artificer, workman or labourer within the meaning of those words as used in the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act. The Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, S. 2, as amended by Act XII of 1920, gives a Magistrate complete discretion to order either the repayment of the advance or the performance of the work. ### —Meaning.

Under the Act, an advance, for marriage expenses of the workman, is a loan but not advance, which, under the Act, must be repaid, in the form of work which the workman has contracted to perform, and not in the form of money instalments. ## —S. 2—Applicability.

—The agreement was for a sum of Rs. 160 due by the accused, father and son, to the complainant and they agreed to work for a period of one year and subsequently to repay any money that may be found still due by them to him at the end of the year. They were to be paid Rs. 6 per month out of which Rs. 2 a month were to be taken towards this debt, Rs. 4 being paid to them in cash. There was no obligation under the agreement to work in the tope after the period of one year and the bond then converted itself into a simple money debt bond. The Magistrate merely directed the two accused to work for the period of six months, the balance of the period of one year after deducting the period for which they had already worked. The order did not say that they should work in the tope any longer than they agreed to; the recovery of the balance that may be found due at the end of the year was to be by a suit. Held, there was nothing unfair in the arrangement and S. 2 of the Act did not apply. ## —S. 4—New contract.

—Accused obtained an advance of Rs. 300 for doing certain work. He worked for a few months after the execution of the agreement but failed to complete the engagement. He was arrested and on being charged with a breach of contract executed another agreement in lieu of the former advance to work for another period of one year. Thereupon the complaint originally filed against him was withdrawn. After the execution of the second agreement he worked again for a little while and then broke off the engagement. The complainant thereupon proceeded against him to enforce his agreement and obtained an order.

Held, that the order was right. Although no advance in cash was made at the time of the second agreement the new contract entered into under the circumstances abovementioned merely superseded the old contract, and its validity is recognised by S. 4 of the Act. # WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT (1923), S. 3—'In the course of employment.'

—S. 2 (m)—'Wages.'

—The term "wages" involves the notion of a contract of service or employment and that the manual labour which a person does must be solely for the benefit of his employer. In the case of students of B class in the MacLagan Engineering College the labour done in workshops is primarily, if not entirely, directed to the imparting of instruction for the benefit of the students and the word "wages" does not import a contract of service, as ordinarily understood, between the students and the College. (Johnstone, J.) INDAR SINGH v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

119 I. C. 722 = A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 573.

—S. 3—Exemption of liability.

—Reckless act of workmen.

A reckless or a rash act is not an act which exempts the employer from liability to compensation. What is necessary is a wilful disobedience of a rule expressly framed. An employee of the defendant company was killed by being run over by an engine on a railway track. It was found that the speed of the engine was faster than that prescribed by the rules and workmen used to cross the track in the ordinary course at that spot without any objection or prohibition.

Held, that there was no wilful disobedience of any rule on the part of the deceased employee and therefore he was entitled to compensation. Johnson v. Marshall Sons & Co., Ltd., (1906) A.C. 409; Radley v. L. and N. W. Railway Co., (1876) 1 A.C. 754 and Daves v. Mann, 10 M. and W. 546, Rel. on. ## —S. 3—'In the course of employment.'

—Accident while travelling in train.

The deceased was a workman in the employ of the defendant company. He was sent on a message by one of the company's officers from Kalyan to Bombay. In Bombay he was directed by another of the company's officers to return to Kalyan. On his way back he was travelling in an electric train. While he was standing at the door of the carriage which was left open, supporting himself on the vertical iron bar, the train while going on a bridge received a jerk, and as a result of that he fell down on the lines and died consequently. Notice of the accident was given within a week. The workman's father proceeded to recover compensation from the defendant company.

Held, (1) that the notice was given as soon as practicable after the happening of the accident;

(2) that warning notices in connexion with these electric trains, which state, amongst other things, "Don't stand near the door," were framed for the purpose of securing the safety of passengers in general, and not for that of workmen and that the defendant company are not protected by proviso (b) (ii) to S. 3;

(3) that the accident was in the course of and arose out of the employment of the deceased workman and he did not take any greater risk than an ordinary traveller would do while travelling on one of these electric trains. (Marten, C. J. and Crump, J.) G. I. P. RAILWAY v. KASHINATH.

the cover to admit more light, got entangled in the belt and was killed.

Held, that the act of the deceased workman in removing the hessian cloth was incidental to his work and was done in the performance of his duty, and arose out of and in the course of his employment within S. 3. ## —S. 3 (b) (ii)—"Wilfully."

A man does a thing wilfully when he does it intentionally because he expects some benefit to himself, either some convenience or an easy way of doing a piece of work and so forth. (B. B. Ghose and S. K. Ghose, J.J.) TIKU KAHAR v. EQUITABLE COAL CO., LTD. 124 I. C. 496 = 1930 Cr. C. 10 = A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 58.

—S. 3 (2).

Kulwant Sahay, J.—The word "wilful" imports that the misconduct is deliberate and not merely a thoughtless act on the spur of the moment. Macpherson, J. dissenting Johnson v. Marshall Sons & Co., Ltd., (1906) A. C. 409, Foll. (Kulwant Sahay and Macpherson, J.J.) URMILA DASI v. TATA IRON AND STEEL CO., LTD. 112 I. C. 328 = 8 Pat. 24 = 9 P. L. T. 511 = A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 508.

—S. 4—Interpretation and scope.

The words "result from" in S. 4 are wider than "solely and directly attributable" and the requirement of the law is satisfied even if the injury can be traced to the accident as the unnatural cause thereof. The true test is not whether the disablement is the direct or even probable result of the injury or the injury the natural cause thereof, but whether the disablement can be traced to the injury even as an unusual, but not unconnected result thereof. Dunham v. Clare, (1902) 2 K. B. 292 and Ystradowen Colliery Co., Ltd. v. Griffiths, (1909) 2 K. B. 533, Ref. (Sukrawardy and Cammiade, J.J.) ASHUTOSH SEAL v. GOURIPORE CO., LTD. 100 I. C. 441 = 31 C. W. ## —S. 5—Burden of proof.

—Continuous service.

An applicant, a relative of the deceased workman, in a suit for compensation against a Dubashe firm contended that there was no continuous service of the deceased workman. He alleged in the plaint that the deceased was a casual labourer employed by the Dubashes' firm for the purposes of their trade. But the firm asserted that the case fell under S. 5 (a).

Held, that it was the firm to show that the service was continuous and that there was no break therein of more than 14 days, so as to bring the case under S. 5 (a). Jones v. Ocean Coal Co., (1899) 2 Q. B. 124 and Gardiner v. Vickers, Ltd., (1928) 44 T. L. R. 563, Dist. (Percival, J. C. and Aston, A. J. C.) COWASJI & SONS v. ALOO JOOTHA. 120 I. C. 510 = 24 S. L. ## —S. 8—Mode of payment.

The Act does not forbid compensation being paid otherwise than through the Commissioner. The whole scheme of S. 8 under sub-S. (1) whereof compensation "shall" be paid to the Commissioner, seems to be designed for the protection of the employer against claims in respect of accidents where his liability is admitted or established. # WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT (1923), S. 30—Question of fact.

—S. 8—Re-deposit of compensation.

Subject to the observance of the provisions of R. 8, the Commissioner has power to order the re-deposit of the compensation. (Held, Offg. C. J., Chari and Ormiston, J.J.) GUDDAI MUTAYALU, In the matter of. 123 I. C. 133 = 7 Rang. 660 = 1930 Cr. C. 91 = A. I. R. 1930 Rang. 1 (S.B.).

—S. 8—Right to compensation.

Section 8 makes it quite clear that compensation is payable only to the dependents of the deceased. It follows, therefore, that if no near relation who is mentioned in S. 2 (d) exists, the money cannot be paid to a more distant relation even though he be his next of kin. The amount is to be refunded to the employer. (Sulaiman and Pullan, J.J.) KALKA PRASAD, In the matter of. 118 I. C. 719 = 10 L. R. A. Cr. 144 = 12 A. I. Cr. E. 381 = 1929 Cr. C. 291 = A. I. ## —S. 12—Contractor, who is.

Tindal supervising coolies working for Dubashes is not contractor.

A tindal was employed by the Dubashes to supervise the workmen, one of whom was the deceased workman. The workman received injuries during the course of, and arising out of the employment which resulted in his death.

Held, that the tindal was not contractor. (Percival, J. C. and Aston, A. J. C.) COWASJI & SONS v. ALOO JOOTHA. 24 S. L. R. 199 = 120 I. C. 510 = 1930 Cr. C. 65 = A. I. R. 1930 Sind 49.

—S. 23—Inherent powers.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act the Commissioner exercises power of a Court only under certain provisions of the Code and S. 151, C. P. Code, not being one of them, Commissioner does not possess any inherent power contemplated by the aforesaid section. (*Shadi Lal, C. ## —S. 30—Finding based on no evidence.

Where the finding is based upon no evidence, a substantial question of law arises and an appeal lies. (B. B. Ghose and S. K. Ghose, J.J.) BHUSAN CHANDRA GHOSE v. GEORGE HENDERSON.

A finding as to 'wilful disobedience' is a finding of fact which might be arrived at on evidence and hence it cannot be interfered with in appeal by the High Court. (B. B. Ghose and S. K. Ghose, J.J.) TIKU KAHAR v. EQUITABLE COAL CO., LTD.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT (1923).*—S. 30—Scope.

Section 30 allows appeals to the High Court from certain orders, in particular, from an order disallowing a claim of a person alleging himself to be a dependant. Except, however, as provided by this section no appeal lies from his orders and there is no authority conferred, by the Act, or by rules framed thereunder on, the Financial Commissioner or any other officer of Government to direct the Commissioner to reverse any decision at which he may have arrived and if a Financial Commissioner purports to direct the Commissioner to reopen the proceedings, his action is ultra vires. Protection under the Act is meant for the workmen who are actually engaged in the process of handling the bales, so as to transfer them from the wharf to the hold of a ship which is actually being loaded. But where a workman is injured while stacking certain bales in a shed alongside the wharf, the workman at the time when he met with the accident is not engaged for the purpose of loading a ship.
